

POLITICS IN INDIA SINCE INDEPENDENCE

DEVELOPMENTS IN POLITICAL PARTIES AND GOVERNANCE XII

CONTENTS

Foreword — iii
Letter to the Readers — v

Chapter 1 Challenges of Nation Building	2
Chapter 2 Era of One party Dominance	26
Chapter 3 Politics of Planned Development	46
Chapter 4 India's External Relations	64
Chapter 5 Challenges in and Restoration of the Congress System	82
Chapter 6 The Crisis of Democratic Order	102
Chapter 7 Rise of Popular Movements	128
Chapter 8 Regional Aspirations	148
Chapter 9 Recent Developments in Indian Politics	172

British street fighters in Karachi in 1947 marked the end of communal violence by jointly flying the flags of India and Pakistan from trucks patrolling the city. This rare photograph captured the joyful freedom and the irony of partition in India and in Pakistan.

In this chapter...

The first few years in the life of independent India were a full of challenges. Some of the most pressing ones concerned national unity and territorial integrity of India. We begin the story of politics in India after independence by looking at how some of these challenges of nation-building were dramatically magnified in the first decade after 1947.

- The compact census with Partition, which resulted in huge-scale migration and displacement and challenged the very idea of a secular India.
 - The integration of the princely states into the Indian Union needed nimble maneuvering.
 - The imperial boundaries of the country needed to be drawn again to meet the aspirations of the people who spoke different languages.
- In the next two chapters we shall turn to other kinds of challenges faced by the country in this early phase.

CHALLENGES OF NATION BUILDING

Challenges for the new nation

At the hour of midnight on 14–15 August 1947, India attained independence. Jawaharlal Nehru, the first Prime Minister of free India, addressed a special session of the Constituent Assembly that night. This was the famous Tryst with destiny speech that you are familiar with.

This was the moment Indians had been waiting for. You have read in your history textbooks that there were many voices in our national movement. But there were two goals almost everyone agreed upon: one, that after independence, we shall run our country through democratic government; and two, that the government will be run for the good of all, particularly the poor and the socially disadvantaged groups. Now that the country was independent, the time had come to realise the promise of freedom.

This was not going to be easy. India was born in very difficult circumstances. Perhaps no other country by then was born in a situation more difficult than that of India in 1947. Freedom came with the partition of the country. This year 1947 was a year of unprecedented violence and trauma of displacement. It was in this situation that independent India started on its journey to achieve several objectives. Yet the turmoil that accompanied independence did not make our leaders lose sight of the multiple challenges that faced the new nation.

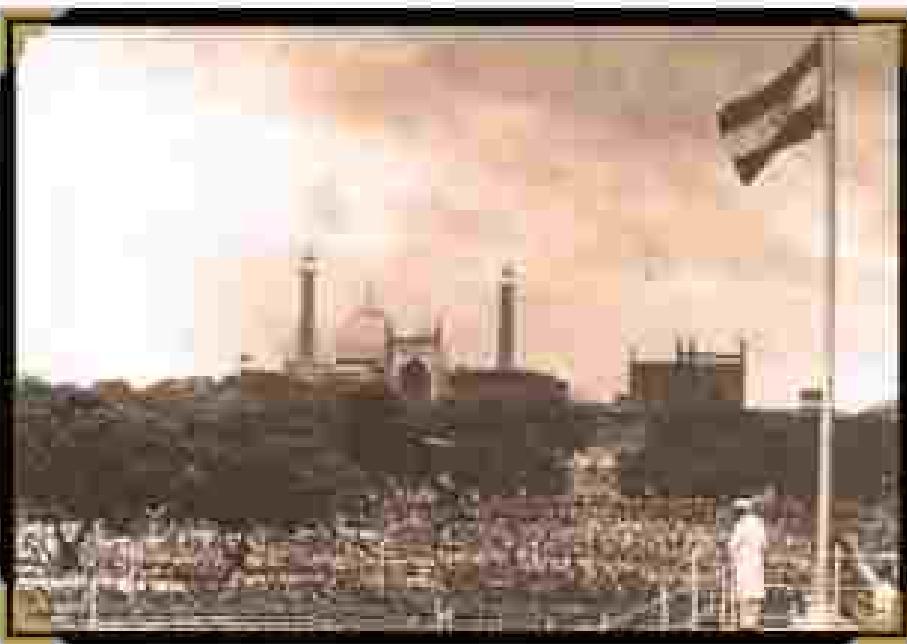

Photo: PIB

Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru speaking from the Red Fort, 15 August 1947

Hindustan Times, 15 Aug 1947

Three Challenges

"Tomorrow we shall be free from the clutches of the British dominion. But at midnight today will be partitioned. Tomorrow will then be a day of rejoicing as well as of mourning."

Mahatma Gandhi
14 August 1947,
Nehru.

Broadly, independent India faced three kinds of challenges. The first and the immediate challenge was to shape a nation that was united, yet accommodative of the diversity in our society. India was a land of continental size and diversity. Its people spoke different languages and followed different cultures and religions. At that time it was widely believed that a country full of such kinds of diversity could not remain together for long. The partition of the country appeared to prove everyone's worst fears. There were serious questions about the future of India: Would India survive as a unified country? Would it do so by emphasising national unity at the cost of every other objective? Would it mean rejecting all regional and sub-national identities? And there was an urgent question: How was integration of the territory of India to be achieved?

The second challenge was to establish democracy. You have already studied the Indian Constitution. You know that the Constitution guaranteed fundamental rights and extended the right to vote to every citizen. India adopted representative democracy based on the parliamentary form of government. These features ensure that the political competition would take place in a democratic framework.

A democratic constitution is necessary but not sufficient for establishing a democracy. The challenge was to develop democratic practices in accordance with the Constitution.

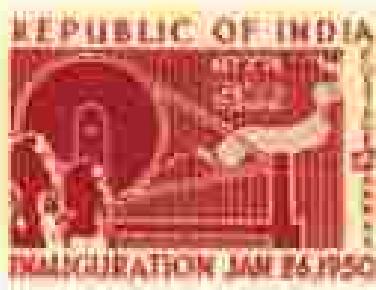

The third challenge was to ensure the development and well-being of the entire society and not only of some sections. Here again the Constitution clearly laid down the principle of equality and special protection to socially disadvantaged groups and religious and cultural communities. The Constitution also set out in the Directive Principles of State Policy the welfare goals that democratic politics must achieve. The real challenge now was to evolve effective policies for economic development and eradication of poverty.

How did independent India respond to these challenges? To what extent did India succeed in achieving the various objectives set out by the Constitution? This entire book is an attempt to respond to these questions. The book tells the story of politics as it unfolded since independence so as to equip you to develop your own answers to the questions like these. In the first three chapters we look at how the three challenges mentioned above were faced in the early years after independence.

In this chapter, we focus on the first challenge of nation-building that occupied centre stage in the years immediately after independence. We begin by looking at the events that formed the contrast of independence. This can help us understand why the issue of national unity and security became a primary challenge at the time of independence. We shall then see how India chose to shape itself into a nation, united by a shared history and common destiny. This unity had to reflect the aspirations of people across the different regions and different sections of people. In the next two chapters we shall turn to the challenge of establishing a democracy and achieving economic development with equality and justice.

I always wanted a library building so that I can go back and purchase all the publications of 15 August 1947. But then books different from what I thought.

These three stamps were issued in 1960 to mark the first Republic Day on 26 January 1960. What do the images on these stamps tell you about the challenges in the new republic? If you were asked to design these stamps in 1960, which images would you have chosen?

MARIF-UL-QURAN

In view of the increasing interest in the study of the Qur'an, HADITH-QUR'AN is now available
in English.
Dr. M. RAMEZ has prepared a simplified version of the Qur'an
in English.

WHILE IN PAKISTAN

VISIT

MANCHESTER HOUSE

TAILORS

The Authority in Style & Colour

(The world's best known)

New York

LONDON TORONTO MELBOURNE

SYDNEY

AED-E-AZAM'S TRIBUTE

Absolute Transfer Of Power
Unknown In World History

PAKISTAN TO MAINTAIN FRIENDSHIP WITH BRITAIN AND HINDUSTAN

MNAH'S SPEECH AT STATE DINNER
TO LORD & LADY MOUNTBATTEN

TO BRITISH PEOPLEThe Dawn of Freedom*Fazl Ahmed Taseer:

This sustained, blared brightness,
the dawn-by-night dawn -
The one that was awaited, surely, this is not their dawn.
This is not the dawn yearning for which Had we set out, treacherous, hoping to find sophomore, sophomore.
The final crystallization of dawn in the wilderness of the sky
Somewhere, almost, must be a spring for the languid arrival of the night.
Somewhere of dawn voice another the last beat of the heart.
The dawn of an India and Pakistan - Dawn's a name

Fazl Ahmed Taseer (1911-1990) Son of Sardar, stayed in Pakistan after Partition. A leader in his political activities, he opposed the military regime and was imprisoned. Colleagues of his poetry include Nadeem-e-Farooq, Quaid-e-Saife and Zafar Ishaq.
Regarded as one of the greatest poets of South Asia in the twentieth century.

We should begin to work in that spirit and in course of time all these ingularities of the majority and minority communities, the Hindu community and the Muslim community — because even as regards Muslims you have Pathans, Punjabis, Shias, Sunnis and so-on and among the Hindus you have Brahmins, Vaishnavas, Khatris, also Bengalis, Madrasis, and so on — will vanish. — You are free, you are free to go to your temples, you are free to go to your mosques or to any other place of worship in this State of Pakistan. You may belong to any religion or caste or creed — that has nothing to do with the business of the State.

Muhammad Ali Jinnah, Presidential Address to the Constituent Assembly of Pakistan at Karachi, 11 August 1947

Today I Call Wahe Shah

Anuradha Pritam

Today, I call Wahe Shah... "Soca mukh your grave"
And tomorrow, the book of love's most afflictional year,
Osho, a daughter of Punjab died and you wrote a sealing song
Today, a memory despatch, say to you, Wahe Shah,
How I horizon of life grieving, just look at your photos
Today, fields are lured with corpses, and blood like the Chenab
Someone has mixed poison in the river rivers' flow
Their duality water is how, igniting our lungs
This birthless sprouting, venom from every pore
The sky is turning mad from undisciplined gale of gore
The toxic forest wind, scuttles right behind its voice
Harming even like a heron's hawk, entire deadly noise

Translation of an extract from a Punjabi poem 'Say Akash Wahe Shah Na'

Anuradha Pritam (1970-2008)

A prominent Punjabi poet and fiction writer. Recipient of Sahitya Akademi Award, Pochan Singh and Jitender Singh Award. After Partition, she moved Delhi for second home. She was active in writing and editing 'Tikam', a Punjabi monthly magazine till her last.

We have a Muslim minority who are so large in numbers that they cannot even if they want, go anywhere else. That is a basic fact about which there can be no argument. Whatever the provocation from Pakistan and whatever the indignities and horrors inflicted on non-Muslims there, we have got to deal with this minority in a civilised manner. We must give them security and the rights of citizenship in a democratic State. If we fail to do so, we shall have a festering sore which will eventually poison the whole body politic and probably destroy it.

Jawaharlal Nehru, Letter to Chief Ministers, 15 October 1947.

Partition: displacement and rehabilitation

On 14-15 August 1947, not one but two nation-states came into existence — India and Pakistan. This was a result of 'partition', the division of British India into India and Pakistan. The drawing of the border demarcating the territory of each country marked the culmination of political developments that you have read about in the history textbook. According to the 'two-nation theory' advanced by the Muslim League, India consisted of not one but two 'people', Hindus and Muslims. That is why it demanded Pakistan, a separate country for the Muslims. The Congress opposed this theory and the demand for Pakistan. But several political developments in 1940s, the political competition between the Congress and the Muslim League and the British rule led to the decision for the creation of Pakistan.

Process of Partition

Thus it was decided that what was till then known as 'India' would be divided into two countries, 'India' and 'Pakistan'. Such a division was not only very painful, but also very difficult to decide and to implement. It was decided to follow the principle of religious majority. This basically means that areas where the Muslims were in majority would make up the territory of Pakistan. The rest would stay with India.

The idea might appear simple, but it presented all kinds of difficulties. First of all, there was no single belt of Muslim majority areas in British India. There were two strips of concentration, one in the west and one in the east. There was no way these two parts could be joined. So it was decided that the new country, Pakistan, will comprise two territories, West and East Pakistan separated by a long expanse of Indian territory. Secondly, not all Muslim majority areas wanted to be in Pakistan. Khan Abdul Gaffar Khan, the unimpaired leader of the North Western Frontier Province and Khawaja 'Wazir Ghulam', was staunchly opposed to the two nation theory. Eventually, his voice was simply ignored and the NWFP was made to merge with Pakistan.

The third problem was that two of the Muslim majority provinces of British India, Punjab and Bengal, had very large areas where the non-Muslims were in majority. Eventually it was decided that these two provinces would be bifurcated according to the religious majority at the district or even lower level. This decision could not be made by the midnight of 14-15 August. It meant that a large number of people did not know on the day of independence whether they were in India or in Pakistan. The Partition of these two provinces caused the deepest trauma of Partition.

This was related to the fourth and the most intractable of all the problems of partition. This was the problem of 'minorities' on both sides of the border. Lakhs of Hindus and Sikhs in the areas that were now in Pakistan and an equally large number of Muslims on the Indian side of Punjab and Bengal had to some extent Delhi and surrounding areas) found themselves trapped. They were to discover that they were undesirable aliens in their own home, in the land where they and their ancestors had lived for centuries. As soon as it became clear that the country was going to be partitioned, the minorities on both sides became easy targets of attack. No one had quite anticipated the scale of this problem. No one had any plans for handling this. Initially, the people and political leaders kept hoping that this violence was temporary and would be controlled soon. But very soon the violence went out of control. The minorities on both sides of the border were left with no option except to leave their homes, often at a few hours' notice.

Q: Now I understand! What was 'East Bengal' now known as? Bangladesh. That is why our Bengal is called 'West Bengal'.

Consequences of Partition

The year 1947 was the year of one of the largest, most abrupt, unplanned and tragic transfer of population that human history has known. There were killings and atrocities on both sides of the border. In the name of religious people of one community ruthlessly killed and harassed people of the other community. Cities like Lahore,

Credit: DPA

A train full of refugees in 1947.

Relativity delayedSource: Women Writers

Riders brought the running train to a halt. People belonging to the other community were pulled out and slaughtered with swords and bullets.

The remaining passengers were treated to fishes, fruits and milk.

The chief engineer said, 'Brothers and sisters, news of this train's arrival was delayed. That is, why we have not been able to entertain you lavishly — the way we wanted to.'

Source: English translation of the story
'Story Kanya Kali'

Amritsar and Krishnanagar divided into communal zones. Muslims would avoid going into an area where mainly Hindus or Sikhs lived; similarly the Hindus and Sikhs stayed away from areas of Muslim predominance.

Forced to abandon their homes and move across borders, people went through immense sufferings. Minorities on both sides of the border fled their home and often secured temporary shelter in refugee camps. They often faced unfair local administration and police in what was till recently their own country. They travelled to the other side of the new border by all sorts of means, often by foot. Even during this journey they were often attacked, killed or raped. Thousands of women were abducted on both sides of the border. They were made to convert to the religion of the abductors and were forced into marriage. In many cases women were killed by their own family members to preserve the 'family honour'. Many children were separated from their parents. Those who did manage to cross the border found that they had no home. For lakhs of these 'refugees' the country's foreign meant life in 'refugee camps' for months and sometimes for years.

Writers, poets and film-makers in India and Pakistan have expressed the ruthlessness of the killings and the suffering of displacement and violence in their novels, short-stories, poems and films. While recounting the trauma of Partition, they have often used the phrase that the survivors themselves used to describe Partition — as a 'division of hearts'.

The Partition was not merely a division of properties, habitats and assets, or a political division of the country and the administrative apparatus. What also got divided were the financial assets, and things like tables, chairs, typewriters, paper-clips, books and also musical instruments of the police band! The employees of the government and the railways were also divided. Above all, it was a violent separation of communities who had hitherto lived together as neighbours. It is estimated that the Partition forced about 80 lakh people to migrate across the new border. Between five to ten lakh people were killed in Partition related violence.

Refugees in Nowrangpur (now in Bangladesh) in 1947.

Beyond the administrative concerns and financial strains, however, the Partition posed another deeper issue. The leaders of the Indian national struggle did not believe in the two-nation theory. And yet, partition on religious basis had taken place. Did that make India a Hindu nation automatically? Even after large scale migration of Muslims to the newly created Pakistan, the Muslim population in India accounted for 12 per cent of the total population in 1951. So, how would the government of India treat its Muslim citizens and other religious minorities (Sikhs, Christians, Jains, Buddhists, Parsis and Jews)? The Partition had already created severe conflict between the two communities.

There were competing political interests behind these conflicts. The Muslim League was formed to protect the interests of the Muslims in colonial India. It was in the forefront of the demand for a separate Muslim nation. Similarly, there were organisations, which were trying to organise the Hindus in order to turn India into a Hindu nation. But most leaders of the national movement believed that India must treat persons of all religions

LIFE WATCH FILM

GARAM HAWA

Soham Mehta, a shoe manufacturer in Ajmer, is struggling to find himself a change amid the people he has lived with all his life. He had lost in the emerging reality after Partition. His business suffered and a refugee from the other side of partitioned India occupies his ancestral dwelling. His daughter has born a tragic end. He believes that things would never be normal again.

But many of his family members decide to move to Pakistan. So he is torn between an impulse to move out to Pakistan and an urge to stay back. A decisive moment comes when Sohan addresses a students' protest rally demanding better compensation from the government. His son Sikander has joined the procession. Can you imagine what Muzaffar Sulaiman really did? What do you think you would have done in those circumstances?

Year: 1973
Director: M.G. Rathyu
Screenplay: Kishor Arora
Actors: Shashi Kapoor, Jaya Bachchan, Ranjeet, Shabana Azmi

Mahatma Gandhi's sacrifice

On the 15th August 1947 Mahatma Gandhi did not participate in any of the Independence Day celebrations. He was in Kolkata in the week which saw tension between Hindus and Muslims. He was saddened by the communal violence and disheartened that the principles of ahimsa (non-violence) and satyagraha (active but non-violent resistance) that he had lived and worked for, had failed to bind the people in troubled times. Gandhiji went on to persuade the Hindus and Muslims to give up violence. His presence in Kolkata greatly improved the situation, and the coming of independence was celebrated in a spirit of communal harmony, with joyous dancing in the streets. Gandhi's prayer meetings attracted large crowds. But this was short-lived as riots between Hindus and Muslims erupted once again and Gandhi had to resort to a fast to bring peace.

Next month Gandhiji moved to Delhi where large-scale violence had erupted. He was mainly concerned about ensuring that Muslims should be allowed to stay in India with dignity, as equal citizens. He was also concerned about the relations between India and Pakistan. He was unhappy with what he saw as the Indian government's decision not to honour its financial commitments to Pakistan. With all this in mind he undertook what turned out to be his last fast in January 1948. As in Kolkata, his fast had a dramatic effect in Delhi. Communal tension and violence reduced. Millions of Delhi and surrounding areas could safely return to their homes. The Government of India agreed to give Pakistan its due.

Gandhi's actions were however not liked by all. Extremists in both the communities blamed him for their conditions. He was particularly disliked by those who wanted Hindus to take revenge or who wanted India to become a country for the Hindus, just as Pakistan was for Muslims. They accused Gandhiji of acting in the interests of the Muslims and Pakistan. Gandhi thought that these people were misguided. He was convinced that any attempt to make India into a country just for the Hindus would destroy India. His steadfast pursuit of Hindu-Muslim unity provoked Hindu extremists so much that they made several attempts to assassinate Gandhi. Despite this he refused to accept armed protection and continued to meet everyone during his prayer meetings. Finally, on 30 January 1948, one such extremist, Nathuram Godse, walked up to Gandhi during his evening prayer in Delhi and fired three bullets at him, killing him instantly. Thus ended a life long struggle for truth, non-violence, justice and tolerance.

Gandhi's death had an almost magical effect on the communal situation in the country. Partition-related anger and violence suddenly subsided. The Government of India cracked down on organisations that were spreading communal hatred. Organisations like the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh were banned for some time. Communal politics began to lose its appeal.

The Gazette of India
EXTRADITION
PUBLISHED BY AUTHORITY

ON FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1927.
AT THE COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE, DELHI.
BY AUTHORITY.

Dated, on the Fifteenth, 1926.

16. FEB. 1927.—Whereas the Provincial Governor has issued an order under section 16 of the Indian Councils Act, 1909, authorizing every administrative or executive authority, except the Central Legislative Assembly, to exercise all the powers conferred by section 16 of the Central Legislative Assembly Act, 1909 (11 & 12 Edward VII, c. 10), the Provincial Government is pleased to direct every such authority to be

J. P. NAT. Umar Soof.

गोपनी नियम

संस्कार

विवाह संस्कार का अधिकारी
विवाह संस्कार का अधिकारी

गोपनी नियम

कानूनी गोपनी नियम

गोपनी नियम

especially said that India should not be a country that gave superior status to adherents of one faith and inferior to those who practised another religion. All citizens would be equal irrespective of their religious affiliation. Being religious or a believer would not be a test of citizenship. They cherished therefore the ideal of a secular nation. This ideal was enshrined in the Indian Constitution.

Sneeta passed her home from Pakistan would get very quiet whenever anyone mentioned Pakistan. One day she decided to ask her about it. Her Nani told her about how he moved from Lyari to Lahore during Partition. Both his parents were killed. Even So would not have survived but a neighbouring Muslim family gave him shelter and kept him in hiding for several days. They helped him find some relatives and that is how he managed to cross the border and start a new life.

Have you heard a similar story? Ask your grandparents or anyone of this generation about their memories of independence day, about the discussions about the creation of Pakistan, about the expectations they had from independence.

Write down at least two of these stories.

Let's Recall

Integration of Princely States

British India was divided into what were called the British Indian Provinces and the Princely States. The British Indian Provinces were directly under the control of the British government. On the other hand, several large and small states ruled by princes, called the Princely States, enjoyed some form of control over their internal affairs as long as they accepted British supremacy. This was called paramountcy or suzerainty of the British crown. Princely States covered one-third of the land area of the British Indian Empire and one out of four Indians lived under princely rule.

The problem

Just before independence it was announced by the British that with the end of their rule over India, paramountcy of the British crown over Princely States would also begin. This meant that all these states, as many as 565 in all, would become legally independent. The British government took the view that all these states were free to join either India or Pakistan or remain independent if they so wished. This decision was left not to the people but to the patrician rulers of these states. This was a very serious problem and could threaten the very existence of a unified India.

The problems started very soon. First of all, the ruler of Travancore announced that the state had decided on independence. The Nizam

Can't we end the injuries of India and Pakistan in the way they did in Germany? I want to have brotherhood in America just simply in India.

How is it better than we have been in the past? They are rather in independence nowhere?

of Hyderabad made a similar announcement the next day. Hurries like the Nawab of Bhopal were averse to joining the Constituent Assembly. This response of the rulers of the Princely States meant that after independence there was a very real possibility that India would get further divided into a number of small countries. The prospects of democracy for the people in these states also looked bleak. This was a strange situation, since the Indian independence was aimed at unity, self-determination as well as democracy. In most of these princely states, governments were run in a non-democratic manner and the rulers were unwilling to give democratic rights to their populations.

Government's approach

The interim government took a firm stand against the possible division of India into small principalities of different sizes. The Muslim League opposed the Indian National Congress and took the view that the States should be free to adopt any course they liked. Sardar Patel was India's Deputy Prime Minister and the Home Minister during the crucial period immediately following independence. He played a historic role in negotiating with the rulers of princely states firmly but diplomatically and bringing most of them into the Indian Union. It may look easy now, but it was a very complicated task which required skilful persuasion. For instance, there were 26 small states in today's Odisha. Southaltra region of Gujarat had 14 big states, 119 small states and numerous other different administrations.

The government's approach was guided by three considerations. Firstly, the people of most of the princely states clearly wanted to become part of the Indian union. Secondly, the government was prepared to be flexible in giving autonomy to some regions. The idea was to accommodate plurality and adopt a flexible approach in dealing with the demands of the regions. Thirdly, in the backdrop of Partition which brought into focus the contest over demarcation of territory, the integration and consolidation of the territorial boundaries of the nation had assumed supreme importance.

Before 15 August 1947, peaceful negotiations had brought almost all states whose territories were contiguous to the new boundaries of India, into the Indian Union. The rulers of most of the states signed a document called the 'Instrument of Accession' which meant that their state agreed to become a part of the Union of India. Accession of the Princely States of Jammu and Kashmir and Manipur proved more difficult than the rest. The issue of Jammu and Kashmir was resolved after a plebiscite confirmed people's desire to join India. You will read about Kashmir in Chapter Eight. Here, let us look at the cases of Hyderabad and Manipur.

" We are at a momentous stage in the history of India. By common endeavour we can make the country to grow greater, while lack of unity will expose us to unexpected calamities. I hope the Indian State will realize fully that if we do not cooperate and work together in the general interest, security and that will nevertheless in all, great and small, and lead us to civil war.

"

Sardar Patel
Letter to Princely rulers,
1947

Nehru with the Nizam of Hyderabad

Hyderabad

Hyderabad, the largest of the Princely States was surrounded entirely by Indian territory. Some parts of the old Hyderabad state are today parts of Maharashtra, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh. Its ruler carried the title, 'Nizam', and he was one of the world's richest men. The Nizam wanted an independent status for Hyderabad. He entered into what was called the Standstill Agreement with India in November 1947 for a year while negotiations with the Indian government were going on.

In the meantime, a movement of the people of Hyderabad State against the Nizam's rule gathered force. The peasantry in the Telangana region in particular, was the victim of Nizam's oppressive rule and rose against him. Women who had seen the worst of this oppression joined the movement in large numbers. Hyderabad town was the nerve centre of this movement. The Communists and the Hyderabad Congress were in the forefront of the movement. The Nizam responded by unleashing a para-military force known as the Razakars on the people. The atrocities and communal nature of the Razakars knew no bounds. They

Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (1875-1950) Leader of the freedom movement;
Diligent leader, follower of Mahatma Gandhi, Deputy Prime Minister and first Home Minister of independent India; played an important role in the integration of Princely States with India; member of important committees of the Constituent Assembly on Fundamental Rights, Minerals, Financial Constitution, etc.

Empresses who... brought in all those instruments of tragic warfare;
political and princely. How did they live their lives after knowing how otherwise efficient

maritime, maritime, super-marijuana; targeting particularly the non-Muslins. The central government had to order the army to tackle the situation. In September 1948, Indian army moved in to control the Nizam's forces. After a few days of intermittent fighting, the Nizam surrendered. This led to Hyderabad's accession to India.

Manipur

A few days before independence, the Maharaja of Manipur, Birendra Bir Singh, signed the Instrument of Accession with the Indian government on the assurance that the internal autonomy of Manipur would be maintained. Under the pressure of public opinion, the Maharaja held elections in Manipur in June 1948 and the state became a constitutional monarchy. Thus Manipur was the first part of India to hold an election based on universal adult franchise.

In the Legislative Assembly of Manipur there were sharp differences over the question of merger of Manipur with India. While the state Congress wanted the merger, other political parties were opposed to this. The Government of India succeeded in pressurising the Maharaja into signing a Merger Agreement in September 1949, without consulting the popularly elected Legislative Assembly of Manipur. This caused a lot of anger and resentment in Manipur, the repercussions of which are still being felt.

This cartoon comments on the relation between the people and the rulers in the Princely States, and also on Rao's approach to resolving this issue.

Reorganisation of States

The process of nation-building did not come to an end with Partition and integration of Princely States. Now the challenge was to draw the internal boundaries of the Indian states. This was not just a matter of administrative divisions. The boundaries had to be drawn in a way so that the linguistic and cultural plurality of the country could be reflected without affecting the unity of the nation.

During colonial rule, the state boundaries were drawn either on administrative convenience or simply coincided with the territories annexed by the British government or the territories ruled by the princely powers.

Our national movement had rejected these divisions as artificial and had promoted the linguistic principle as the basis of formation of states. In fact after the Nagpur session of Congress in 1920 the principle was recognised as the basis of the reorganisation of the Indian National Congress party itself. Many Provincial Congress Committees were created by linguistic zones, which did not follow the administrative divisions of British India.

Things changed after Independence and Partition. Our leaders felt that carving out states on the basis of language might lead to disruptions and disintegration. It was also felt that this would draw attention away from other social and economic challenges that the country faced. The central leadership decided to postpone matters. The need for postponement was also felt because the fate of the Princely States had not been decided. Also, the memory of Partition was still fresh.

This decision of the national leadership was challenged by the local leaders and the people. Protests began in the Telugu speaking areas of the old Madras province, which included present day Tamil Nadu, parts of Andhra Pradesh, Kerala and Karnataka. The Vishwakarman movement (as the movement for a separate Andhra was called) demanded that the Telugu speaking areas should be separated from the Madras province of which they were a part and be made into a separate Andhra province. Nearly all the political forces in the Andhra region were in favour of linguistic reorganisations of the then Madras province.

The movement gathered momentum as a result of the Central government's vacillation. Potti Sriramulu, a Congress leader and a veteran Congressman, went on an indefinite fast that led to his death after 56 days. This caused great unrest and resulted in violent outbreaks in Andhra region. People in large numbers took to the streets. Many were injured or lost their lives in police firing. In Madras, several legislators resigned their seats in protest. Finally, the Prime Minister announced the formation of a separate Andhra state in December 1952.

“66 linguistic provinces are formed, it will also give a fillip to the regional language. It would be absurd to make reading the medium of instruction in all the regions and it will more absurd to use English for this purpose.

”

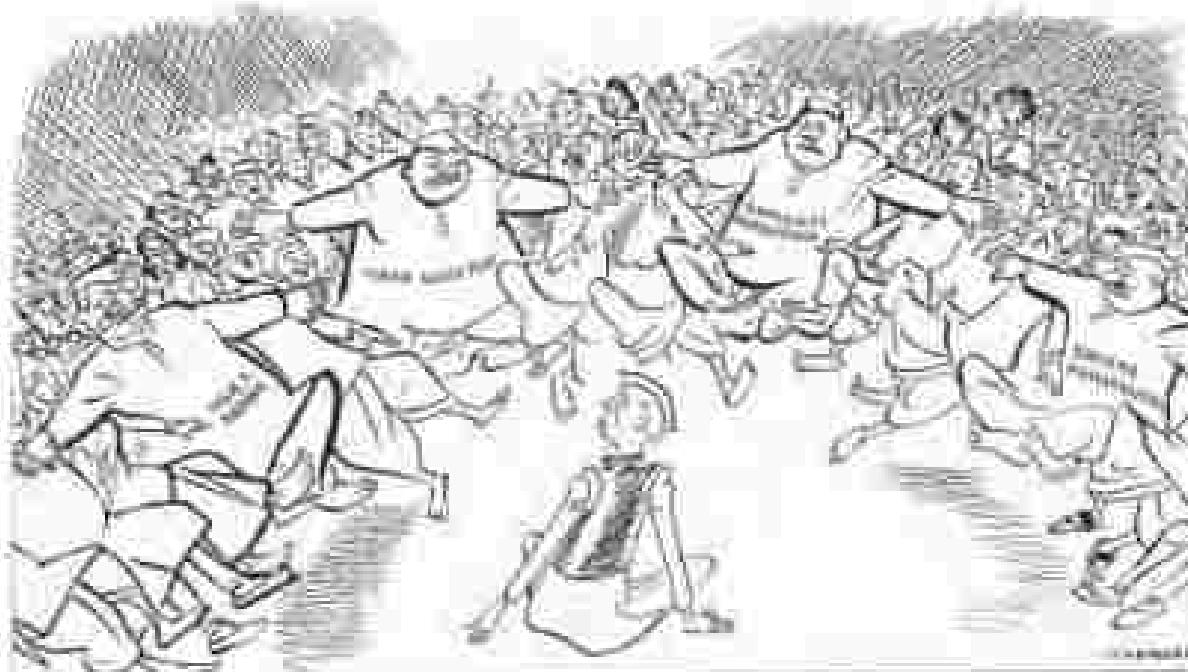

Mahatma Gandhi
January 1948

Note: This illustration is not a map drawn to scale and should not be taken to be an authentic depiction of India's external boundaries.

Read the map and answer the following questions:

1. Name the original state from which the following states were carved out:
Gujarat Haryana
Meghalaya Chhattisgarh
2. Name two states that were affected by the Partition of the country.
3. Name the states today that were once a Union Territory.

Central Herald

"Struggle for Survival" published in 1952 captures contemporary expression of the demand for linguistic states.

The formation of Andhra Pradesh opened the struggle for making of other states on linguistic basis in other parts of the country. These struggles forced the Central Government into appointing a States Reorganisation Commission in 1953 to look into the question of re-arranging of the boundaries of states. The Commission in its report accepted that the boundaries of the state should reflect the boundaries of different languages. On the basis of the report the States Reorganisation Act was passed in 1956. This led to the creation of 14 states and six union territories.

Now, isn't this very interesting? Nehru and other leaders were very popular, and yet the people did not seem to agree for linguistic states against the wishes of the leaders.

Potti Sreenuvulu (1891-1952): Andhra worker left government job to participate in Telangana Satyagraha. Also participated in Andhra Satyagraha, went on a fast in 1948 demanding that temples in Madras province be opened to all. Underwent a fast unto death from 10 October 1952 demanding separate state of Andhra Pradesh, died during the fast on 10 December 1952.

Chintan Bhagat

"Younger the Guru" (published in 1950) asked if the State Reorganisation Commission could contain the guru of regions.

One of the most important concerns in the early years was that demands for separate states would endanger the unity of the country. It was felt that linguistic states may foster separation and create pressures on the newly founded nation. But the leadership, under popular pressure, finally made a choice in favour of linguistic states. It was hoped that if we accept the regional and linguistic claims of all regions, the threat of division and separatism would be reduced. Besides, the accommodation of regional demands and the formation of linguistic states were also seen as more democratic.

Now it is more than fifty years since the formation of linguistic states. We can say that linguistic states and the movements for the formation of these states changed the nature of democratic politics and leadership in some basic ways. The path to politics and power was now open to people other than the small English-speaking elite. Linguistic reorganisation also gave some uniform basis to the drawing of state boundaries. It did not lead for disintegration of the country as many had feared earlier. On the contrary it strengthened national unity.

Above all, the linguistic states underlined the acceptance of the principle of diversity. When we say that India adopted democracy, it does not simply mean that India embraced a democratic constitution; nor does it merely mean that India adopted the format of elections. The choice was larger than that. It was a choice in favour of recognising and accepting the existence of differences which could at times be oppositional. Democracy, in other words, was associated with plurality of ideas and ways of life. Much of the politics in the later period was to take place within this framework.

Fast Forward - Creation of New States

The acceptance of the principle of linguistic states did not mean, however, that all states immediately became linguistic states. There was an experiment of bilingual Bombay state, consisting of Marathi and Konkani speaking people. After a popular agitation, the state of Maharashtra and Goa were created in 1960.

In Punjab also, there were two linguistic groups, Hindi speaking and Punjabi speaking. The Punjabi speaking people demanded a separate state, but it was not granted with other states in 1940. Statehood for Punjab came ten years later, in 1956, when the territories of today's Haryana and Himachal Pradesh were separated from the large Punjab state.

Another major reorganisation of states took place in the north west in 1972. Madhya Pradesh was carved out of Agra in 1972. Manipur and Tripura too emerged as separate states in the same year. The states of Arunachal Pradesh and Meghalaya came into being in 1972. Nagaland too became a state much earlier in 1963.

Languages do not, however, remain the sole basis of organisation of states. In later years, sub-regional demands for separate states on the basis of a separate regional culture or combination of regional tributaries in development. Thus such states, Jharkhand, Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand, were created in 2000. The story of re-organisation has not come to an end. There are many regions in the country where there are movements demanding separate and smaller states. These include Tamiangal in Andhra Pradesh, Vaishali in Bihar, Hati Pradhan in the western region of Uttar Pradesh and the eastern region of West Bengal.

The US has one Earth: all one population but 51 nations. Why must India have more than 29?

EXERCISES

1. Which among the following statements about the Partition is incorrect?
 - (a) Partition of India was the outcome of the "two-nation theory".
 - (b) Punjab and Bengal were the two provinces divided on the basis of religion.
 - (c) East Pakistan and West Pakistan were not contiguous.
 - (d) The scheme of Partition included a plan for transfer of population across the border.

2. Match the principles with the instances:

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) Mapping of boundaries on religious grounds (b) Mapping of boundaries on grounds of different languages (c) Demarcating boundaries within a country by geographical series (d) Demarcating boundaries within a country on administrative and political grounds 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> i. Pakistan and Bangladesh ii. India and Pakistan iii. Jharkhand and Chhattisgarh iv. Haryana, Punjab, and Uttaranchal
--	---

3. Take a current political map of India (showing outlines of states) and mark the location of the following Princely States.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) Junagadh (b) Mysore 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> (c) Manipur (d) Gwalior
--	--

4. Here are two opinions:

Slimay: "The merger with the Indian State was an extension of democracy to the people of the Princely States."

Indraprastha: "I am not so sure, there was force being used. Democracy comes by creating consensus."

What is your own opinion in the light of accession of Princely States and the responses of the people in these parts?

5. Read the following very different statements made in August 1947 —

"Today you have worn on your heads a crown of thorns. The seat of power is a nasty thing... You have to remain ever watchful on that seat... you have to be more humble and forbearing... now there will be no end to your being tested." — M.K. Gandhi

"...India will awake to a life of freedom... we step out from the old to the new... we end today a period of ill fortune and India discovers herself again. The achievement we celebrate today is but a step, an opening of opportunity..." — Jawaharlal Nehru

Spell out the agenda of nation building that flows from these two statements. Which one appeals more to you and why?

6. What are the reasons being used by Nehru for keeping India secular? Do you think these reasons were only ethical and sentimental? Or were there some practical reasons as well?
7. Bring out two major differences between the challenge of nation building for eastern and western regions of the country at the time of independence.
8. What was the task of the States Reorganisation Commission? What was its most salient recommendation?
9. It is said that the nation is to a large extent an "imagined community" held together by common beliefs, history, political aspirations and imaginations. Identify the features that make India a nation.
10. Read the following passage and answer the questions below:
 "In the history of nation-building only the Soviet experiment bears comparison with the Indian. There too, a sense of unity had to be forged between many diverse ethnic groups, religious, linguistic communities and social classes. The scale – geographic as well as demographic – was comparably massive. The raw material the state had to work with was equally unpropitious: a people divided by faith and driven by debt and disease." — RAMESHWAR GUHA
 - (a) List the communities that the author mentions between India and Soviet Union and give one example for each of these from India.
 - (b) The author does not talk about dissimilarities between the two experiments. Can you mention two dissimilarities?
 - (c) In retrospect which of these two experiment worked better and why?

LET US DO IT TOGETHER

- Read a novel/ story on Partition by an Indian and a Pakistani/Sanghoeshi writer. What are the commonalities of the experience across the border?
- Collect all the stories from the 'Let's Research' suggestion in this chapter. Prepare a wallchart that highlights the common experiences and the stories on the unique experiences.

This famous sketch by Shankar appeared on the cover of his collection - Don't Spear Me, Shankar. The original sketch was drawn to the order of India's Chief Justice, but this cartoon captures the dual role of the Congress during the era of one-party dominance.

In this chapter...

The struggle for independence ended in the mid-thirties. This was accompanied by the challenge of making democracy work. Thus, Jawaharlal Nehru and others began advocating India's independence. In this chapter, we look at the first decade of central party politics in India.

- the evolution of a system of rule and its actions
- the formation of the Congress Party in the years immediately after independence
- the response of Congress elites to their power

ERA OF ONE-PARTY DOMINANCE

Challenge of building democracy

You now have an idea of the difficult circumstances in which independent India was born. You have read about the serious challenge of nation-building that confronted the country right in the beginning. Faced with such serious challenges, leaders in many other countries of the world decided that their country could not afford to have democracy. They said that national unity was their first priority and that democracy will introduce differences and conflicts. Therefore many of the countries that gained freedom from colonialism experienced non-democratic rule. It took various forms: nominal democracy but effective control by one leader, one-party rule or direct army rule. Non-democratic regimes always started with a promise of returning democracy very soon. But once they established themselves, it was very difficult to dislodge them.

The conditions in India were not very different. But the leaders of the newly independent India decided to take the more difficult path. Any other path would have been surprising, for our freedom struggle was deeply committed to the idea of democracy. Our leaders were conscious of the critical role of politics in any democracy. They did not see politics as a problem, they saw it as a way of solving the problems. Every society needs to decide how it will govern and regulate itself. There are always different policy alternatives to choose from. There are different groups with different and conflicting aspirations. How do we resolve these differences? Democratic politics is an answer to this question. While competition and power are the two most visible things about politics, the purpose of political activity is and should be deciding and pursuing public interest. This is the route our leaders decided to take.

Last year you studied how our Constitution was drafted. You would remember that the Constitution was ready and signed on 26 November 1949 and it came into effect on 26 January 1950. At that time the country was being ruled by an interim government. It was now necessary to install the first democratically elected government of the country. The Constitution had laid down the rules, now the machine had to be put in place. Initially it was thought that this was only a matter of a few months. The Election Commission of India was set up in January 1950. Subramaniar Seni became the first Chief Election Commissioner. The country's first general elections were expected sometime in 1950 itself.

“...In India, ...
... ownership plays a part in its political manipulation
... magnified by the part it plays in the politics of any other country... And in politics, ... ownership is a sure road to degradation and moral decline.”

Dr. B. R.
Ambedkar
Speech on Constitution
Sensitivity
25 November 1949

That was a good decision. But what about women who did not want to be known as 'Mrs. Somebody' and other titles and names? What name of her mother?

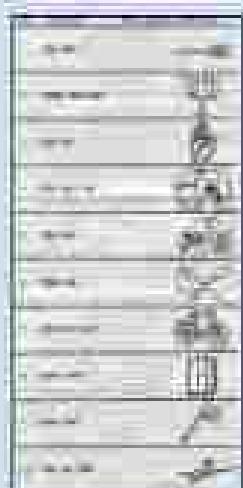

But the Election Commission discovered that it was not going to be easy to hold a free and fair election in a country of India's size. Holding an election required delimitation or drawing the boundaries of the electoral constituencies. It also required preparing the electoral rolls, or the list of all the citizens eligible to vote. Both these tasks took a lot of time. When the first draft of the rolls was published, it was discovered that the names of nearly 40 lakh women were not recorded in the list. They were simply listed as "wife of ..." or "daughter of ...". The Election Commission refused to accept these entries and ordered a revision if possible and deletion if necessary. Preparing for the first general election was a mammoth exercise. No election on this scale had ever been conducted in the world before. At that time there were 17 crore eligible voters, who had to elect about 5,200 MLAs and 480 Members of Lok Sabha. Only 15 per cent of these eligible voters were literate. Therefore the Election Commission had to think of some special method of voting. The Election Commission trained over 3 lakh officers and polling staff to conduct the elections.

It was not just the size of the country and the electorate that made this election unusual. The first general election was also the first big test of democracy in a poor and illiterate country. Till then democracy had existed only in the prosperous countries, mainly in Europe and North America, where nearly everyone was literate. By that time many countries in Europe had not given voting rights to all women. In this context India's experiment with universal adult franchise

A caricature's impression of the election committee formed by the Congress in 1952. On the committee, besides Nehru, Morarji Desai, Indira Gandhi, P.P. Bagchi, Jayaprakash Narayan, Jayaprakash Narayan, Jayaprakash Narayan, Manmohan Singh, D.P. Mukherjee, V.H. Tendulkar and Girija Shankar Patel.

Changing methods of voting

A sample of the ballot boxes used from the British General Election of 1959.

These days we use an Electronic Voting Machine (EVM) to record votes. But that is not how we started. In the first general election, it was decided to place inside each polling booth a box for each candidate with the election symbol of that candidate. Each voter was given a blank ballot paper which they had to drop into the box of the candidate they wanted to vote for. About 20 such steel boxes were used for the purpose. A presiding officer from Punjab described how he prepared the ballot boxes—“Each box had to have its candidate's symbol both inside and outside it and inside on either side had to be displayed the name of the candidate in Urdu, Hindi and Punjabi along with the number of the constituency, the polling station and the polling booth. The paper seal with the numerical description of the candidate, signed by the presiding officer, had to be inserted in the three flaps and its bottom closed by a lock which had to be fixed in the glass at the other end by means of a wire. All this had to be done on the day previous to the one fixed for voting. To fix symbols and labels the boxes had to be rubbed with sandpaper or a piece of brick. I found that it took about five hours for a person, including my two helpers, to complete this work. All this was done at my house.”

Photograph: Tahir
Muhammad

After the first two elections the method was changed. Now the ballot paper carried the names and symbols of all the candidates and the voter was required to put a stamp on the name of the candidate they wanted to vote for. This method worked for nearly forty years. Towards the end of 1990s the Election Commission started using the EVM. By 2004 the entire country had shifted to the EVM.

All the sides in your family and neighbourhood know their experience of participating in elections.

- Do anyone vote in the first or second general election? Why?
- Is there someone who has used all the three methods of voting? What should they say?
- In what ways do they find the methods of these days different from the present ones?

Let's Research

Maulana Abdul Kalam Azad (1888-1958) original name — Abdul Kalam Mohamed Ali Armed member of Indian freedom fighter and Congress leader;
 proponent of Hindu-Muslim unity; opposed to Partition; member of Constituent Assembly; Education Minister;
 the founder of Jamia
 Millia Islamia.

appeared very bold and risky. An Indian editor called it "the biggest gamble in history". Organiser, a magazine, wrote that Jawaharlal Nehru "would live to witness the failure of universal adult franchise in India". A British member of the Indian Civil Service claimed that "a future and more enlightened age will view with astonishment the absurd farce of recording the votes of millions of illiterate people".

The elections had to be postponed twice and finally held from October 1951 to February 1952. But this election is referred to as the 1952 election since most parts of the country voted in January 1952. It took six months for the campaigning, polling and counting to be completed. Elections were competitive — there were on an average more than four candidates for each seat. The level of participation was encouraging — more than half the eligible voters turned out to vote on the day of elections. When the results were declared these were accepted as fair even by the losers. The Indian experiment had proved the critics wrong. The Times of India held that the polls have "unshakened all those sceptics who thought the introduction of adult franchise too risky an experiment in this country". The Hindustan Times claimed that "there is universal agreement that the Indian people have conducted themselves admirably in the largest experiment in democratic elections in the history of the world". Observers outside India were equally impressed. India's general election of 1952 became a landmark in the history of democracy all over the world. It was no longer possible to argue that democratic elections could not be held in conditions of poverty or lack of education. It proved that democracy could be practised anywhere in the world.

Congress dominance in the first three general elections

The results of the first general election did not surprise anyone. The Indian National Congress was expected to win this election. The Congress party, as it was popularly known, had inherited the legacy of the national movement. It was the only party then to have an organisation spread all over the country. And finally, its leader Jawaharlal Nehru, the party had the most popular and charismatic leader in Indian politics. He led the Congress campaign and toured through the country. When the final results were declared, the extent of the victory of the Congress did surprise many. The party won 395 of the 400 seats in the Lok Sabha and finished way ahead of any other challenger. The Communist Party of India that came next in terms of seats won only 16 seats. The state elections were held with the Lok

Note: This illustration uses a map based on state and union territories taken in 1956, showing a departure of India's external boundaries.

Congress Voted Back To Power At Centre

266 SEATS ANNEXED SO FAR OUT OF 500

The Congress Party has been voted back to power at the Centre. The毛主席派 is here reported to have won more than one-third of the Lok Sabha. The combined opposition parties got less than one-third of the seats. The results of the Lok Sabha election were as follows:

Party	Number of Seats
Congress	266
Communist Party	104
Jan Sangh	52
Others	168
Total	500

This verdict in favour of a Congress government will cover for the next four years from 1962 to 1966.

Reds' Success in Kerala
Working Majority Achieved

Rajkumar Arnold Kao (1888-1964), a Gandhian and Freedom fighter, belonged to the Kao family of Kasaragod. He was a Congress leader from his mother, member of Constituent Assembly, Minister for Health in independent India's first ministry, continued as Health Minister till 1957.

Nehru elections. The Congress won big victory in those elections as well. It won a majority of seats in all the states except Travancore-Cochin (part of today's Kerala), Madras and Orissa. Finally even in these states the Congress formed the government. So the party ruled all over the country at the national and the state level. As expected, Jawaharlal Nehru became the Prime Minister after the first general election.

A look at the electoral map on the last page would give you a sense of the dominance of the Congress during the period 1952-1962. In the second and the third general elections, held in 1957 and 1962 respectively, the Congress maintained the same position in the Lok Sabha by winning three-fourth of the seats. None of the opposition parties could win even one-tenth of the number of seats won by the Congress. In the state assembly elections, the Congress did not get majority in a few states. The most significant of these cases was in Kerala in 1957 when a coalition led by the CPI formed the government. Apart from exceptions like this, the Congress controlled the national and all the state governments.

The extent of the victory of the Congress was artificially boosted by our electoral system. The Congress won three out of twenty four seats but it did not get even half of the votes. In 1952, for example, the Congress obtained 45 per cent of the total votes, but it managed to win 74 per cent of the seats. The Socialist Party, the second largest party in terms of votes, secured more than 10 per cent of the votes all over the country, but it could not even win three per cent of the seats. How did this happen? For this you need to recall the discussions about the first part—the post module in your textbook ‘Constitution at Work’ last year.

In this system of election, that has been adopted in our country, the party that gets more votes than others tends to get much more than its proportional share. That is exactly what worked in favour of the Congress. If we add up the votes of all the non-Congress candidates it was more than the votes of the Congress. But the non-Congress votes were divided between different rival parties and candidates. So the Congress was still way ahead of the opposition and managed to win.

THE HINDU

INDIA'S NATIONAL NEWSPAPER

DATED 20. 6. 1967
TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1967
EDITION FOR THE 20TH JUNE 1967

22 20 20 20

PRESIDENT'S RULE IN KERALA

CABINET ADVISES ACTION UNDER ARTICLE 356

PROCLAMATION MAY BE ISSUED TO-DAY

From the Telegrams

The Central Cabinet has advised action under Article 356 of the Constitution to be taken against the Government of Kerala. The advice was given at a meeting of the Cabinet in New Delhi on Tuesday. The Cabinet had been informed by the Home Ministry that the Government of Kerala had lost its majority in the Legislative Assembly. The Cabinet had also been informed that the Communists had withdrawn from the coalition government.

INTRODUCTION BY CENTRE

KERALA MINISTERS REACT

WHAT OTHER PARTIES SAY

PTI

ANOTHER MAJOR WAR UNLIKELY

RADHAKRISHNA VIKAS, ANDHRA PRADESH, TELANGANA, MADRAS, MURSHIDABAD AND ASSAM

THE SITTING OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY
IN ASSAM
WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH THE PREPARATIONS FOR THE UPCOMING
GENERAL ELECTIONS.

केरल शासन द्वारा की भूमि

सुधार का बचन
वर्षदारीकरण समिक्षापत्र में
प्राप्त ज्ञान की
एक प्राचीन की
जाग दी गई।

Communist victory in Kerala

As early as in 1957, the Congress party had the bitter taste of defeat in Kerala. In the assembly elections held in March 1957, the Communist Party won the largest number of seats in the Kerala legislature. The party won 59 of the 121 seats and had the support of five independents. The government invited E. M. S. Namboodiripad, the leader of the Communist legislative party, to form the ministry. For the first time in the world, a Communist party government had come to power through democratic elections.

In taking power in the State, the Congress party became liberalistic and adopted the elected government. The CPI had come to power on the promise of carrying out radical and progressive policy measures. The Communists claimed that the election was led by vested interests and religious opposition.

In 1959, the Congress government at the Centre dismissed the Communist government in Kerala under Article 356 of the Constitution. This decision proved very controversial and was widely cited as the first instance of the misuse of constitutional emergency powers.

E.M.S. Namboodiripad leading a procession of Communist Party workers after his party was dismissed from office in Thiruvananthapuram in August 1959.

PTI

socialist Party

The origins of the Socialist Party can be traced back to the mass movement stage of the Indian National Congress in the pre-independence era. The Congress-Socialist Party (CSP) was formed within the Congress in 1934 by a group of young leaders who wanted a more radical and egalitarian Congress. In 1948, the Congress amended its constitution to prevent its members from having a dual party membership. This forced the Socialists to form a separate Socialist Party in 1948. The Party's electoral performance caused much disappointment to its supporters. Although the Party had presence in most of the states of India, it could achieve electoral success only in a few pockets.

Acharya Narendra Deo (1885-1966)
Freedom fighter and founding President of the Congress Socialist Party; split several times during the freedom movement, active in peasant movement etc; a symbol of Gurudom after Indira Gandhi led the Sonia Party and later the Praja Socialist Party.

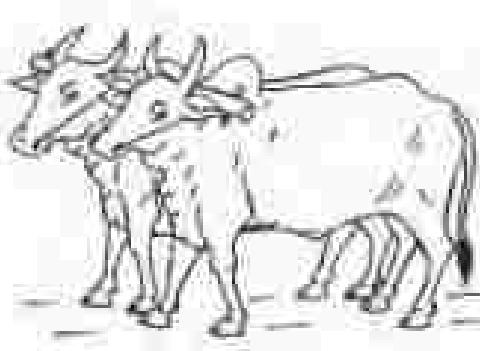

The socialists believed in the ideology of democratic socialism which distinguished them both from the Congress as well as from the Communists. They criticised the Congress for favouring capitalists and landlords and for ignoring the workers and the peasants. But the socialists faced a dilemma when in 1955 the Congress declared its goal to be the socialist pattern of society. Thus it became difficult for the socialists to present themselves as an effective alternative to the Congress. Some of them, led by Rammanohar Lohia, increased their distance from and criticism of the Congress party. Some others like Asoka Mehta advocated a limited cooperation with the Congress.

The Socialist Party went through many splits and reunions leading to the formation of many socialist parties. These included the Kisan Mazdoor Praja Party, the Praja Socialist Party and Samyukt Socialist Party. Jayaprakash Narayan, Achyut Patwardhan, Asoka Mehta, Acharya Narendra Deo, Ravinderan Lalaji and S. M. Joshi were among the leaders of the socialist parties. Many parties in contemporary India, like the Samajwadi Party, the Rashtriya Janata Dal, Janata Dal (United) and the Janata Dal (Secular) trace their origins to the Socialist Party.

Nature of Congress dominance

India is not the only country to have experienced the dominance of one party. If we look around the world, we find many other examples of one-party domination. But there is a crucial difference between these and the Indian experience. In the rest of the cases the dominance of one party was ensured by uncompromising democracy. In some countries like China, Cuba and Syria the constitution permits only a single party to rule the country. Some others like Myanmar, Belarus, Egypt, and North Korea are effectively one-party states due to legal and military measures. Until a few years ago, Mexico, South Korea and Taiwan were also effectively one-party dominant states. What distinguished the dominance of the Congress party in India from all these cases was it happened under democratic conditions. Many parties contested elections to elections of free and fair elections and yet the Congress managed to win elections after election. This was similar to the dominance the African National Congress has enjoyed in South Africa after the end of apartheid.

Founded in 1929 as National Revolutionary Party and later renamed as the Institutional Revolutionary Party the PRI (in Spanish) exerted power in Mexico for almost 60 decades. It represented the legacy of the Mexican revolution. Originally PRI was a mixture of various interests involving political and military leaders, labour and peasant organisations and numerous political parties. Over a period of time, Alfonso Bues Cuellar, the founder of PRI, was able to capture the organisation and thereby the government. Elections were held at regular intervals and it was the PRI which won every time. Other parties existed in name only so as to give the ruling party greater legitimacy. The electoral laws were operated in a manner so as to ensure that the PRI always won. Elections were often rigged and manipulated by the ruling party. The rule was described as 'the perfect dictatorship'. Finally the party lost in the Presidential elections held in 2000. Mexico is no longer a one-party dominated country. But the tactics adopted by the PRI during the period of its dominance had a long-term effect on the health of democracy. The citizens have yet to develop full confidence in the free and fair nature of elections.

Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar (1891-1956), leader of the anti-caste movement and the struggle for justice to the Dalits, scholar and precursor founder of the Independent Labour Party. He founded the Scheduled Caste Federation, planned the formation of the Republican Party, a Member of Vidhan's Executive Council during the Second World War, Chairman, Drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly, Minister in Nehru's first coalition Interim Government in 1946. Due to differences over the Hindu Code Bill, adopted Buddhism in 1950, with the words of following:

Rafi Ahmed Kidwai
(1904-1958)
Congress leader.
U.P. Minister in U.P. in 1937 and again in 1946; Minister for Communications in the first ministry of the India; Food and Agriculture Minister
1952-54.

Answer:

The Congress was a party, now we have coalition of parties. Does it mean that no single government can come?

The roots of this extraordinary success of the Congress party go back to the legacy of the freedom struggle. Congress was seen as inheritor of the national movement. Many leaders who were in the forefront of that struggle were now contesting elections as Congress candidates. The Congress was already a very well-organised party and by the time the other parties could even think of a strategy, the Congress had already started its campaign. In fact, many parties were formed only around independence or after that. Thus, the Congress had the 'first off the blocks' advantage. By the time of independence the party had not only spread across the length and breadth of the country as we had seen in the map but also had an organisational network down to the local level. Most importantly, as the Congress was till then a national movement, its history was inclusive. All these factors contributed to the dominance of the Congress party.

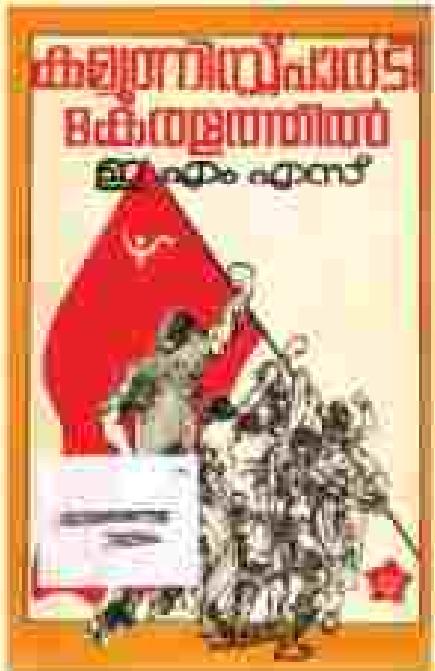

Congress as social and ideological coalition

You have already studied the history of how Congress evolved from its origins in 1885 as a pressure group for the newly educated, professional and commercial classes to a mass movement in the twentieth century. This laid the basis for its eventual transformation into a mass political party and its subsequent domination of the political system. Thus the Congress began as a party dominated by the English-speaking upper caste, upper middle class and urban elite. But with every civil disobedience movement it launched, its social base widened. It brought together diverse groups, whose interests were often contradictory. Peasants and industrialists, urban dwellers and villagers, workers and owners, middle, lower and upper classes and castes, all found space in the Congress. Gradually, its leadership also expanded beyond the upper caste and upper class professionals to agriculturist-based traders with a rural orientation. By the time of independence, the Congress was transformed into a rainbow-like social coalition broadly representing India's diversity in terms of classes and castes, religions and languages and various interests.

Many of these groups merged their identity within the Congress. Very often they did not and continued to exist within the Congress as groups and individuals holding different beliefs. In this sense the Congress was an ideological coalition as well. It accommodated the revolutionary and pacifist, conservative and radical, extremist and moderate and the right, left and all shades of the centre. The Congress was a 'platform' for numerous groups, interests and even political parties to take part in the national movement. In pre-independence days, many organisations and parties with their own constitution and organisational structure were allowed to exist within the Congress.

The Communist Party of India

In the early 1920s communist groups emerged in different parts of India taking inspiration from the Bolshevik revolution in Russia and advocating socialism as the solution to problems affecting the country. From 1936, the Communists worked mainly from within the fold of the Indian National Congress. A parting of ways took place in December 1941, when the Communists decided to support the British in their war against Nazi Germany. Unlike other non-Congress parties the CPI had a well-rolled party machinery and dedicated cadre at the time of independence. However, Independents raised different voices in the party. The basic question that troubled the party was the nature of Indian independence. Was India really free or was freedom a sham?

Soon after independence, the party thought that the transfer of power in 1947 was not true independence and encouraged violent uprisings in Telangana. The Communists failed to generate popular support for their position and were crushed by the armed forces. This forced them to rethink their position. In 1951 the Communist Party abandoned the path of violent revolution and decided to participate in the approaching general elections. In the first general election, CPI won 10 seats and emerged as the largest opposition party. The party's support was more concentrated in Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal, Bihar and Kerala.

A. K. Gopalan, S. A. Dange, E. M. S. Namboodiripad, P. C. Joshi, Ajay Ghosh and P. Sundarayya were among the notable leaders of the CPI. The Party went through a major split in 1964 following the ideological rift between Soviet Union and China. The pro-Soviet faction remained as the CPI while the opponents formed the CPI(M). Both these parties continue to exist to this day.

A. K. Gopalan (1904–1977), Communist leader from Kerala.
Worked as a Congress leader initially, joined the Communist Party in 1936 after the split in the Communist Party.
In 1954, joined the CPI(M) and worked for strengthen of the party, especially as a central committee member of Parliament from 1962

Let's watch a filmSOMHASAN

This Marathi film based on Arun Kolatkar's book, namely 'Somhasan' and 'Mystical Objects', depicts the battle for the post of Chief Minister in Maharashtra. This is told through journalist Govind Tende in the novel. Subsequently, he explores the internal power struggle within the ruling party and the secondary role of the Congress.

Prime Minister Nehruveer Gandhi is trying to shift his base towards the Marathi Chief Minister. Both considerings trying to win back their lost supporters. So, to show his support, he is forced to form a new political party. In this process, while supporting him back, also struggling to Marathi and the grim social reality in rural Maharashtra from the perspective of the film.

Year: 1981

Director: Arun Kolatkar
Screenplay: Arun Kolatkar
Cinematography: Arun Gavade
Editor: Prakash Jagnani
Original Story: Arun
Kolatkar
Music: Madhu Wagle, Nitin
Agrawal

Some of them, like the Congress Socialist Party, later separated from the Congress and became opposition parties. Despite differences regarding the methods, specific programmes and policies, the party managed to contain if not resolve differences and build a consensus.

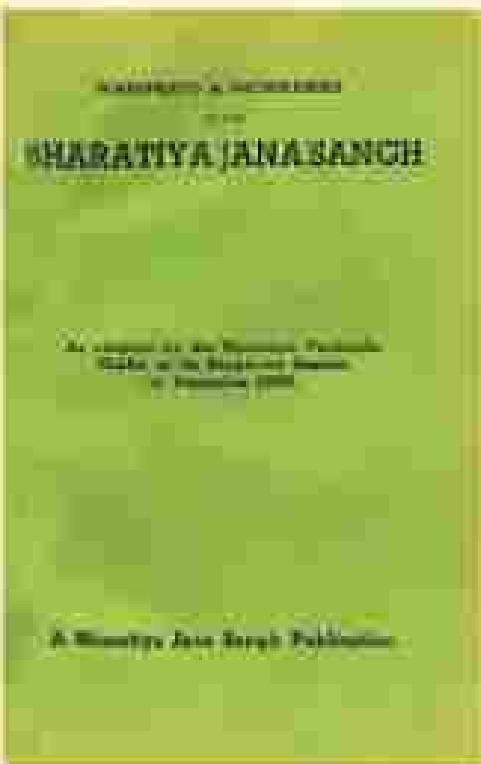

Tolerance and management of factions

This coalition-like character of the Congress gave it an unusual strength. Firstly, it could accommodate all those who join it. Therefore, it has to avoid any extreme position and strike a balance on almost all issues. Compromises and inclusiveness are the hallmarks of a coalition. This strategy put the opposition in a difficulty. Anything that the opposition wanted to say, would also find a place in the programme and ideology of the Congress. Secondly, in a party that has the nature of a coalition, there is a greater tolerance of internal differences and ambitions of various groups and leaders are accommodated. The Congress did both these things during the freedom struggle and continued doing this even after independence. That is why, even if a group was not happy with the position of the party or with its share of power, it would remain inside the party and fight the other groups rather than leaving the party and becoming an opposition.

These groups inside the party are called factions. The conditional nature of the Congress party tolerated and in fact encouraged various factions. Some of these factions were based on ideological considerations, but very often these factions were rooted in personal ambitions and rivalries. Instead of being a weakness, internal factionalism became a strength of

Bharatiya Jana Sangh

The Bharatiya Jana Sangh was formed in 1951 with Shyama Prasad Mukherjee as its founder-President. Its lineage however can be traced back to the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS) and the Hindu Mahasabha before independence.

The Jana Sangh was different from other parties in terms of ideology and programmes. It emphasized the idea of one country, one culture and one nation and believed that the country could become modern, progressive and strong on the basis of Indian culture and traditions. The party called for a reunion of India and Pakistan in Akhand Bharat. The party was in forefront of agitation to replace English with Hindi as the official language of India and was also opposed to the granting of concessions to religious and cultural minorities. The party was a consistent advocate of India developing nuclear weapons especially after China carried out its atomic tests in 1964.

In the 1960s Jana Sangh remained on the margins of the electoral politics and was able to secure only 2 Lok Sabha seats in 1962 elections and 4 seats in 1967 general elections to Lok Sabha. In the early years its support came mainly from the urban areas in the Hindi speaking states like Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh, Delhi and Uttar Pradesh. The party's leaders included Shyama Prasad Mukherjee, Deen Dayal Upadhyaya and Balraj Madhok. The Bharatiya Janata Party traces its roots to the Bharatiya Jana Sangh.

Deen Dayal Upadhyaya
(1916-1968) Full-time RSS worker since 1942; founder member of the Bharatiya Jana Sangh; General Secretary and later President of Bharatiya Jana Sangh; initiated the process of integration of RSS and BJP.

In the Congress, Nitam: (here) was there within the party for various factions to fight with each other; it meant that leaders representing different interests and ideologies remained within the Congress rather than go out and form a new party.

Most of the state units of the Congress were made up of numerous factions. The factions took different ideological positions making the Congress appear as a grand centrist party. The other parties primarily attempted to influence these factions and thereby indirectly influenced policy and decision making from the "margin". They were far removed from the actual exercise of authority. They were not alternatives to the ruling party, instead they constantly pressurised and criticised, censured and influenced the Congress. The system of factions functioned as balancing mechanism within the ruling party. Political competition therefore took place within the Congress. In that sense, in the first decade of electoral competition the Congress acted both as the ruling party as well as the opposition. That is why this period of Indian politics has been described as the "Congress system".

Emergence of opposition parties

As we have noted above, it is not that India did not have opposition parties during this period. While discussing the results of the elections, we have already come across the names of many parties other than the Congress. Even then India had a larger number of diverse and vibrant opposition parties than many other multi-party democracies. Some of these had come into being even before the first general election of 1952. Some of these parties played an important part in the politics of the country in the 'sixties and 'seventies. The roots of almost all the non-Congress parties of today can be traced to one or the other of the opposition parties of the 1950s.

All these opposition parties succeeded in gaining only a token representation in the Lok Sabha and state assemblies during this period. Yet their presence played a crucial role in maintaining the democratic character of the system. These parties offered a sustained and often principled criticism of the policies and practices of the Congress party. This kept the ruling party under check and often changed the balance of power within the Congress. By keeping democratic political alternative alive,

"Tug of War" (29 August 1954) is a caricature expression of the relative strength of the opposition and the government. Tugging on the tree are Nehru and his cabinet colleagues. Trying to uproot the tree are opposition leaders A. K. Gopalan, Achyuta Kripalani, S.C. Chatterjee, Neelkantha Nair and Sunder Singh.

Swatantra Party

Swatantra Party was formed in August 1959 after the Nagpur resolution of the Congress which called for land ceilings, take-over of food grain trade by the state and adoption of cooperative farming. The party was led by old Congressmen like C. Rajagopalachari, K. M. Munshi, M. G. Ranga and Minoo Masani. The party stood out from the others in terms of its position on economic issues.

The Swatantra Party wanted the government to be less and less involved in controlling the economy. It believed that prosperity could come only through individual freedom. It was critical of the development strategy of state intervention in the economy, centralised planning, nationalisation and the public sector; it instead favoured expansion of a free private sector. The Swatantra Party was against land ceilings in agriculture, and opposed cooperative farming and state trading. It was also opposed to the progressive tax regime and demanded dismantling of the licensing regime. It was critical of the policy of non-alignment and maintaining friendly relations with the Soviet Union and advocated closer ties with the United States. The Swatantra Party gained strength in different parts of the Country by way of merger with numerous regional parties and interests. It attracted the landlords and princes who wanted to protect their land and status that was being threatened by the land reforms legislation. The industrialists and business class who were against nationalisation and the licensing policies also supported the party. Its narrow social base and the lack of a dedicated cadre of party members did not allow it to build a strong organisational network.

Swatantra Party was formed in August 1959 after the Nagpur resolution of the Congress which called for land ceilings, take-over of food grain trade by the state and adoption of cooperative farming. The party was led by old Congressmen like C. Rajagopalachari, K. M. Munshi, M. G. Ranga and Minoo Masani. The party stood out from the others in terms of its position on economic issues.

The Swatantra Party wanted the government to be less and less involved in controlling the economy. It believed that prosperity could come only through individual freedom.

It was critical of the development strategy of state intervention in the economy, centralised planning, nationalisation and the public sector; it instead favoured expansion of a

C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

C. Rajagopalachari (1872-1972) A senior leader of Congress and Party, whose associate of Mahatma Gandhi, member of Constituent Assembly, first Indian to be the Governor-General of India (1948-1952), minister in Colvin Raman's and S. V. Sevagramas Chittaranjan's cabinets, president of the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

“

“Parties election or constitutional (by Congress member) more important than my presence in the court or the Congress..... I have completely exhausted my ability both in the Congress and Govt.”

”

Jawaharlal Nehru

to A. Nehru in Rajya, after the election of Tariq Ali as Congress president against him which.

these parties prevented the government from becoming anti-democratic. These parties also presented the leaders who were to play a crucial role in the shaping of our country.

In the early years there was a lot of mutual respect between the leaders of the Congress and those of the opposition. The interim government that ruled the country after the declaration of independence had the first general election included opposition leaders like Dr. Ambedkar and Bhupansh Prasad Mukherjee in the cabinet. Jawaharlal Nehru often referred to his brothers for the Socialist Party and invited socialist leaders like Jayaprakash Narayan to join his government. This kind of personal relationship with and respect for political adversaries declined after the party competition grew more intense.

Thus this first phase of democratic politics in our country was quite unique. The inclusive character of the national movement led by the Congress enabled it to attract different sections, groups and interests making it a broad based social and ideological coalition. The Nehru's Cabinet after the swearing-in of Chakravarti Rajagopalachari as Governor General in 1948.

Seating from left to right: Haji Ahmad Rida, Baldev Singh, Motilal Ansari, Prime Minister Nehru, Chakravarti Rajagopalachari, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Subhas Chandra Bose, Mr. John Mathew and Jagjivan Ram. Standing from left to right: Mr. Gaidgi, Mr. Neogi, Mr. Ambedkar, Bhupansh Prasad Mukherji, Mr. C. Rajagopalayam and Mr. Jayaram Dasgupta.

Party competition in a Bihar village

When two buffaloes fight, the grass beneath them gets crushed. The Congress and Socialist parties are fighting with each other. Both of them are taking new members. The poor people will be ground between the two grindstones.

"No, the poor people won't be crushed. In fact, they'll benefit", was someone's reply. "Things aren't accomplished by one party alone. It is the competition and rivalry between two groups that benefits the public."

The news of Socialist Party meeting had agitated the Sainthals. The news of the opening of the hospital hadn't made much impression on them — nor did they ever bother much about the fights and quarrels of the friendly gatherings of the villagers. But this meeting was for the tillers of the soil. ... To whom does the land belong? To the tiller? He who till will sow! He who sows will harvest! He who writes will eat, come what may!" Kalicharan lectured.

There was turmoil in the District Office of the Congress Party too. They were about to elect a Party Chairman. There were four candidates — two real contenders and two dummy candidates. It was a contest between Rajputs and Bhumihars. The wealthy businessmen and zamindars from both the castes were visibility all over the district in their motorcars, camouflaging. All kinds of maneuvering was going on between them. The Seth who owned the Kafnar cotton mill was representing the Bhumihar party, and the owner of Pariaganj jute mill was representing the Rajputs. You should see the money they're flogging around.

Translated extracts from Fanchinernath Renu's novel 'Mahe Anchal'. The novel is set in Purulia district in North East Bihar in the early years after Independence.

key role of the Congress in the freedom struggle thus gave it a head start over others. As the ability of the Congress to accommodate all interests and all aspirants for political power steadily declined, other political parties started gaining greater significance. Thus, Congress dominated constituencies only one-third in the politics of the country. We shall come to the other phases in later parts of this textbook.

Fanchinernath Renu

Shyama Prasad Mukherjee (1901-1953); Leader of Hindu Mahasabha; Founder of Bharatiya Jana Sangh; Minister in Nehru's first cabinet after Independence; resigned in 1950 due to differences over relations with Pakistan; Member of Constituent Assembly and later the Lok Sabha; was opposed to India's policy of autonomy to Jammu & Kashmir; arrested during Jai-Sangh's agitation against Hashim - policy decision during detention.

EXERCISES

1. Choose the correct option to fill in the blanks.

(a)	The First General Elections in 1952 involved simultaneous elections to the Lok Sabha and _____ (The President of India / State Assemblies / Rajya Sabha / The Prime Minister).
(b)	The party that won the second largest number of Lok Sabha seats in the first elections was the _____ (free Socialist Party / Bharatiya Jana Sangh / Communist Party of India / Bharatiya Janata Party).
(c)	One of the guiding principles of the ideology of the Socialist Party was _____ (Working class interests / protection of Private property / economy free from State control / Autonomy of States within the Union).

2. Match the following leaders listed in List A with the parties in List B.

List A	List B
(i) S. A. Dange	(i) Bharatiya Jana Sangh
(ii) Jayanta Basu	(ii) Socialist Party
(iii) Nisar Masani	(iii) Praja Socialist Party
(iv) Ashok Mehta	(iv) Communist Party of India

3. Four statements regarding one-party dominance are given below. Mark each of them as true or false.

(a)	One-party dominance is related to the absence of strong alternative political parties.
(b)	One-party dominance occurs because of weak public opinion.
(c)	One-party dominance is linked to the nation's colonial past.
(d)	One-party dominance reflects the absence of comparable ideals in account.

4. If either the Janata Party or the Communist Party of India had formed the government after the first election, in which respects would the policies of the government have been different? Specify three differences each for both the parties.

5. In what sense was the Congress an ideological coalition? Mention the various ideological currents present within the Congress.

6. Did the prevalence of a 'one-party dominant system' affect adversely the democratic nature of Indian politics?

7. Bring out three differences each between Socialist parties and the Communist party and between Bharatiya Jana Sangh and Socialist Party.

8. What would you consider as the main differences between Mahasabha and NDA under one-party domination?

9. Take a political map of India (with State outlines) and mark:
- (a) two states where Congress was not in power at some point during 1952-67
 - (b) two states where the Congress remained in power through the period.
10. Read the following passage and answer the questions below.
- " Patel, the organisational chief of the Congress, wanted to purge the Congress of other political groups and sought to make of it a cohesive and disciplined political party. He sought to take the Congress away from its all-embracing character and turn it into a close-knit party of disciplined cadres. Being a 'realist' he looked more for discipline than for comprehension. While Gandhi took too romantic a view of 'carrying on the movement,' Patel's idea of transforming the Congress into strictly political party with a single ideology and tight discipline showed an equal lack of understanding of the eclectic role that the Congress, as a government, was to be called upon to perform in the decades to follow." — Ram Komanji
- (a) Why does the author think that Congress should not have been a cohesive and disciplined party?
 - (b) Give some examples of the eclectic role of the Congress party in the early years.
 - (c) Why does the author say that Gandhi was 'too' Congress; future was 'romantic'?

LET US DO IT TOGETHER

Make a chart of elections and government in your State since 1952. The chart could have the following columns: year of election, name of the winning party, name of ruling party or parties, name of the Chief Minister(s).

Stamp like these, issued mostly between 1950s and 1960s, depicted a vision of planned development.
Left to right, they show:
Bottom: Bhakra
Nangal Dam, Chittaranjan
Locomotive, Circular Delivery, Tractor, Sardar Patterson, Bhakra Dam,
Electric Train, Wheat Revolution, Bhakra
Dam, Hindustan Aircraft Factory.

In this chapter...

In the last two chapters we have studied how the leaders of independent India responded to the challenges of nation-building and establishing democracy. Let us now turn to the third challenge that of economic development to ensure well-being of all. As in the case of the first two challenges, our leaders chose a path that was difficult and difficult. In this case their success was much more limited, for the challenge was tougher and more enduring.

In this chapter, we study the story of political choices involved in some of the key questions of economic development.

- What were the key choices and debates about development?
- Which strategy was followed by our leaders in the first two decades? And why?
- What were the main achievements and limitations of this strategy?
- Why was this development strategy abandoned in later years?

POLITICS OF PLANNED DEVELOPMENT

As the global demand for steel increases, Orissa, which has one of the largest reserves of untapped iron ore in the country, is being seen as an important investment destination. The State government hopes to cash in on this unprecedented demand for iron ore and has signed Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) with both international and domestic steel makers. The government believes that this would bring in necessary capital investment and provide a lot of employment opportunities. The iron ore resources lie in some of the most underdeveloped and predominantly tribal districts of the state. The tribal population fears that the setting up of industries would mean displacement from their home and livelihood. The environmentalists fear that mining and industry would pollute the environment. The central government feels that if the industry is not allowed it would set a bad example and discourage investments in the country.

Can you identify the various interests involved in this case? What are their key points of conflict? Do you think there are any common points on which everyone can agree? Can this issue be resolved in a way which satisfies all the various interests? As you ask these questions, you would find yourself facing yet bigger questions. What kind of development does Orissa need? Indeed, whose need can be called Orissa's need?

Political contestation

These questions cannot be answered by an expert. Decisions of this kind involve weighing the interests of one social group against another, present generation against future generations. In a democracy such major decisions should be taken or at least approved by the people themselves. It is important to take advice from experts on mining, from environmentalists and from economists. Yet the final decision must be a political decision, taken by people's representatives who are in touch with the feelings of the people.

After independence our country had to make a series of major decisions like this. Each of these decisions could not be made independent of other such decisions. All these decisions were bound together by a shared vision or model of economic development. Aligned

Orissa villagers protest against POSCO plant

Sanjay Kumar

PHILIPPA AWAIK: People facing displacement by the proposed POSCO units and plant in Jagatsinghpur staged a demonstration outside the Korean company's office here on Thursday. They were demanding cancellation of the memorandum of understanding signed between the company and the Odisha government last year.

More than 100 men and women from the gram panchayats of Dihinkia, Nangam and Gudakesingha tried to enter the office premises but the police prevented them. Railing slates, the protesters said the company should not be allowed to set up its plant at the cost of their lives and livelihood. The demonstration was organised by the Bastarhiya Vibhav Sangathan and the Nationalist Samaj.

The Hindu, 21 June 2010

What is Left and what is Right

In the politics of most countries you will always come across references to parties and groups with a Left or Right ideology or leaning. These terms characterise the position of the concerned group or party regarding social change and role of the state in effecting socio-economic development. Left often refers to those who are in favour of the poor, disadvantaged sections and support government policies for the benefit of these sections. The Right refers to those who believe that free competition and market economy actions stimulate progress and that the government should not unneccessarily intervene in the economy.

Can you tell which of the parties in the 1980s were Rightist and which were the Left parties? Where would you place the Congress party of that time?

Everyone agreed that the development of India should mean both economic growth and social and economic justice. It was also agreed that this must not be left to businesspersons, industrialists and farmers themselves, that the government should play a key role in this. There was disagreement, however, over the kind of role that the government must play in ensuring growth with justice. Was it necessary to have a centralised institution to plan for the entire country? Should the government itself run some key industries and business? How much importance was to be attached to the needs of justice if it differed from the requirements of economic growth?

Each of these questions involved contestation which has continued ever since. Each of the claimants had political, cultural and constitutional grounds to support their claims. That is why we need to study the process of development as a part of the history of politics in India.

Ideas of development

Very often this contestation involves the very idea of development. The example of Orissa shows us that it is not enough to say that everyone wants development. For 'development' has different meanings for different sections of the people. Development would mean different things for example, to an industrialist who is planning to set up a steel plant, to an urban consumer of steel and to the Adiwal who lives in that region. Thus any discussion on development is bound to generate contradictions, conflicts and debates.

The first decade after independence witnessed a lot of debate around this question. It was communism then, as it is even now, for people to refer to the 'West' as the standard for measuring development. 'Development' was about becoming more 'modern' and modern was about becoming more like the industrialised countries of the West. This is how common people as well as the experts thought. It was believed that every country would go through the process of industrialisation as in the West, which involved the breakdown of traditional social structures and the rise of capitalism and liberalism. Modernisation was also associated with the ideas of growth, material progress and scientific rationality. This kind of idea of development allowed everyone to talk about different countries as developed, developing or underdeveloped.

I thought the construction was simple.
All big decisions involve big money and that is why politicians take these decisions.

On the eve of independence, India had before it two models of modern development: the liberal-capitalist model as in much of Europe and the US and the socialist model as in the USSR. You have already studied these two ideologies and read about the 'cold war' between the two super powers. There were many in India then who were deeply impressed by the Soviet model of development. These included not just the leaders of the Communist Party of India, but also those of the Socialist Party and leaders like Nehru within the Congress. There were very few supporters of the American-style capitalist development.

This reflected a broad consensus that had developed during the national movement. The nationalist leaders were clear that the economic policies of the government of free India would have to be different from the narrowly defined commercial functions of the colonial government. It was clear, moreover, that the task of poverty alleviation and social and economic redistribution was being seen primarily as the responsibility of the government. There were debates among them. For some, industrialisation seemed to be the preferred path. For others, the development of agriculture and in particular alleviation of rural poverty was the priority.

Planning

Despite the various differences, there was a consensus on one point: that development could not be left to private actors; that there was the need for the government to develop a design or plan for development. In fact the idea of planning as a process of rebuilding economy earned a good deal of public support in the 1940s and 1950s all over the world. The experience of Great Depression in Europe, the inter-war

Are you sure we don't have to be western, in order to be modern? Is that possible?

Planning Commission

Nehru addressing the staff of the Planning Commission.

Planning Commission

Do you recall any reference to the Planning Commission in your book Constitution at Work last year? Actually there was none, for the Planning Commission is not one of the many commissions and other bodies set up by the Constitution. The Planning Commission was set up in March, 1950 by a simple resolution of the Government of India. It has an advisory role and its recommendations become effective only when the Union Cabinet approves these. The resolution which set up the Commission defined the scope of its work in the following terms:

The Constitution of India has guaranteed certain Fundamental Rights to the citizens of India and enunciated certain Directive Principles of State Policy, in particular, that the State shall strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting – a social order in which justice, social, economic and political, shall — direct its policy towards securing, among other things,

- that the citizens, men and women equally, have the right to an adequate means of livelihood;
- that the ownership and control of the material resources of the community are so distributed as best to subserve the common good;
- that the operation of the economic system does not result in the concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment.

A member of the Planning Commission has actually followed these objectives in practice.

construction of Japan and Germany, and most of all the spectacular economic growth against heavy odds in the Soviet Union in the 1930s and 1940s contributed to this consensus.

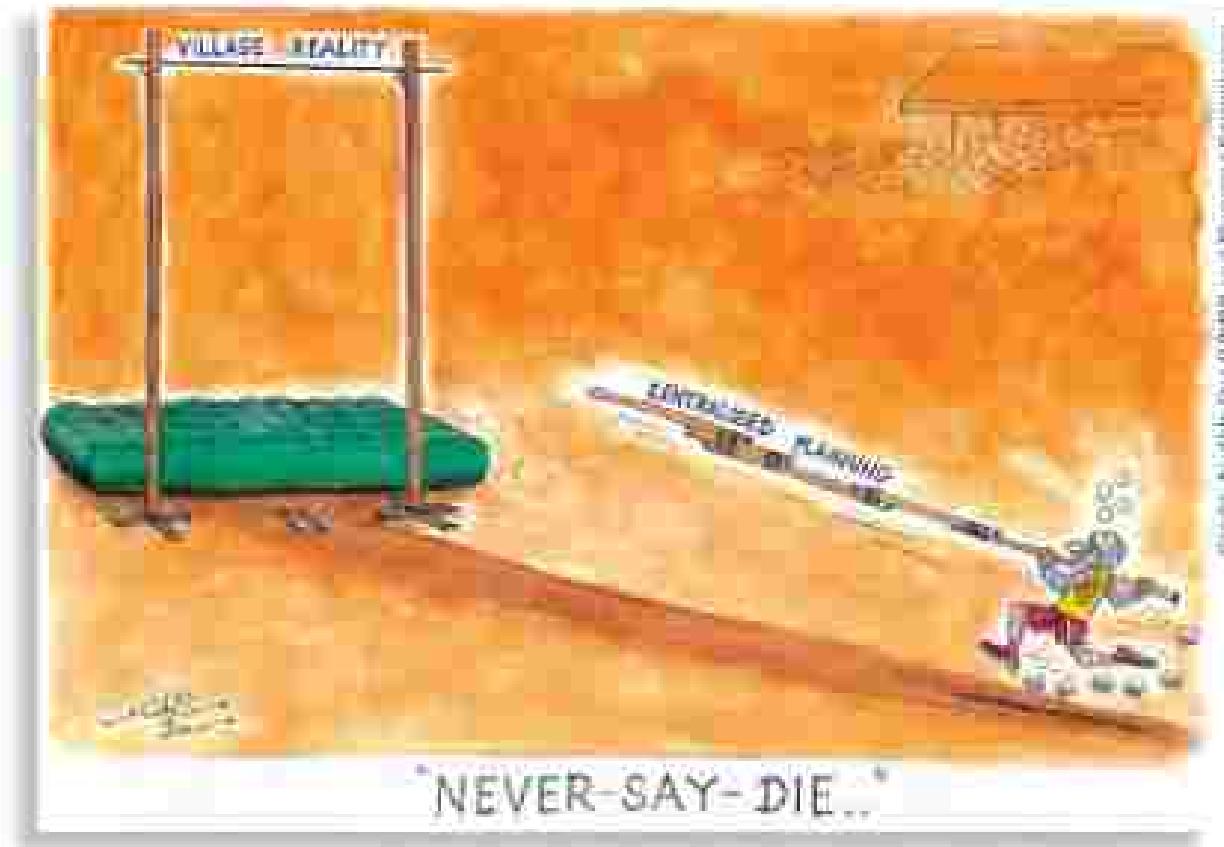

Thus the Planning Commission was not a sudden invention. In fact, it has a very interesting history. We commonly assume that private investors, such as industrialists, and big business entrepreneurs, are averse to ideas of planning; they seek an open economy without any state control in the flow of capital. That was not what happened here. Rather, a section of the big industrialists got together in 1944 and drafted a joint proposal for setting up a planned economy in the country. It was called the Bombay Plan. The Bombay Plan wanted the state to take major initiatives in industrial and other economic investments. This, from left to right, planning for development was the most obvious choice for the country after independence. Soon after India became independent, the Planning Commission came into being. The Prime Minister was its Chairperson. It became the most influential and central machinery for deciding what path and strategy India would adopt for its development.

The Early Initiatives

As in the USSR, the Planning Commission of India opted for five year plans (FYP). The idea is very simple: the Government of India prepares a document that has a plan for all its income and expenditure for the next five years. Accordingly the budget of the central and all the State governments is divided into two parts: 'non-plan' budget that is spent on routine items on a yearly basis and 'plan' budget that is spent on a five year basis as per the priorities fixed by the plan. A five year plan has the advantage of permitting the government to focus on the larger picture and make long-term interventions in the economy.

Chetan Bhagat, Debut Book 'One Day in the Life of an Indian'

First Five Year Plan document

The draft of the First Five Year Plan and then the actual Plan Document, released in December 1951, generated a lot of excitement in the country. People from all walks of life – academics, journalists, government and private sector employees, industrialists, farmers, politicians etc. – discussed and debated the documents extensively. The excitement with planning reached its peak with the launching of the Second Five Year Plan in 1956 and continued somewhat till the Third Five Year Plan in 1961. The Fourth Plan was due to start in 1966. By this time, the novelty of planning had declined considerably, and moreover, India was facing acute economic crisis. The government decided to take a 'plan break'. Though many criticisms emerged both about the process and the priorities of these plans, the foundation of India's economic development was firmly in place by then.

The First Five Year Plan

The First Five Year Plan (1951–1956) sought to get the country's economy out of the cycle of poverty. R.N. Bhattacharya, a young economist involved in drafting the plan, argued that India should 'trot slowly' for the first two decades as a fast rate of development might smother democracy. The First Five Year Plan addressed, mainly, the agrarian sector including investment in farms and irrigation.

Agricultural sector was hit hardest by Partition and needed urgent attention. Huge allocations were made for large-scale projects like the Bhakra Nangal Dam. The Plan identified the pattern of land distribution in the country as the principal obstacle in the way of agricultural growth. It focused on land reforms as the key to the country's development.

One of the basic aims of the planners was to raise the level of per capita income, which could be possible only if the people saved more money than they spent. As the basic level of spending was very low in the 1950s, it could not be reduced any more. So the planners sought to push savings up. That too was difficult as the total capital stock in the country was rather low compared to the total number of employable people. Nevertheless, people's savings did rise in the first phase of the planned process until the end of the Third Five Year Plan. But, the rise was not as spectacular as was expected at the beginning of the First Plan. Later, from the early 1960s till the early 1970s, the proportion of savings in the country actually dropped consistently.

Rapid Industrialisation

The Second FYP stressed on heavy industries. It was drafted by a team of economists and planners under the leadership of P. C. Mahalanobis. If the first plan had preached patient, the second wanted to bring about quick structural transformation by making changes simultaneously in all possible directions. Before this plan was finalised, the Congress party at its session held at Avadi near the then Madras city, passed an important resolution. It declared that 'socialist pattern of society' was its goal. This was reflected in the Second Plan. The government imposed substantial tariffs on imports in order to protect domestic industries. Such protected environment helped both public and private sector industries to grow. As savings and investment were growing in this period, a bulk of these industries like electricity, railways, steel, telecommunications and communication could be developed in the public sector. Indeed, such a push for industrialisation marked a turning point in India's development.

It, however, had its problems as well. India was technologically backward, so it had to spend precious foreign exchange to buy technology from the global market. That apart, as industry attracted more investment than agriculture, the possibility of food shortage loomed large. The Indian planners found balancing industry and agriculture really difficult. The Third Plan was not significantly different from the Second. Critics pointed out that the plan strategies from this time onward displayed an unmistakable "urban bias". Others thought that industry was wrongly given priority over agriculture. There were also those who wanted focus on agriculture related industries rather than heavy ones.

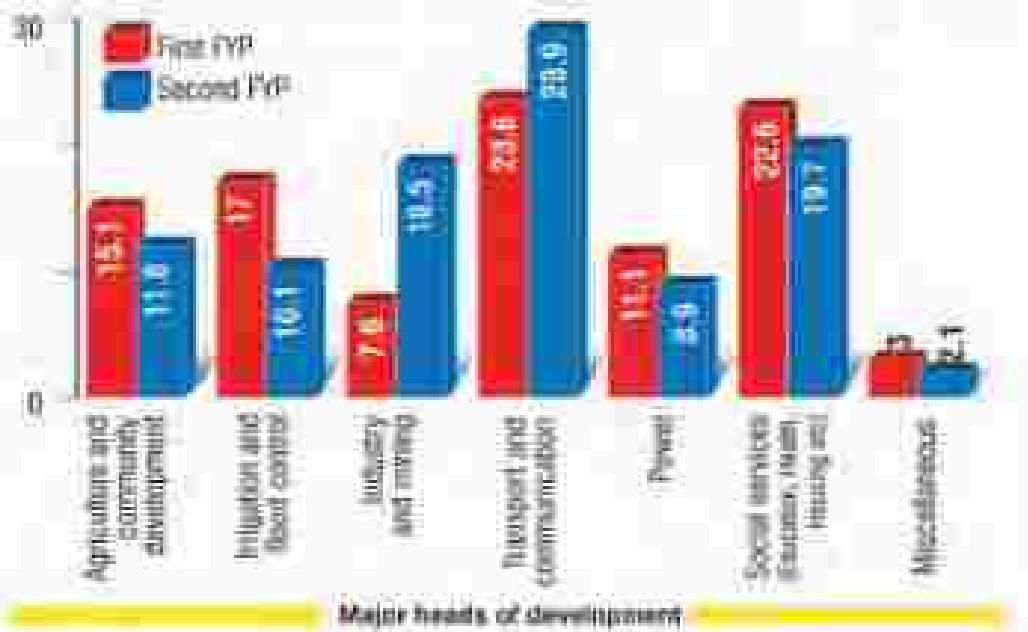

Third Five Year Plan documents

P.C. Mahalanobis (1883-1972). Scientist and statistician of international repute; founder of Indian Statistical Institute (1931); author of the Second Five Year Plan; supporter of rapid industrialisation and active use of the public sector.

Allocations in the First and Second Five Year Plans

Decentralised planning

It is not necessary that planning always has to be centralised, nor is it that planning is only about big industries and large projects. The Kerala model is the name given to the path of planning and development started by the State of Kerala. There has been a focus in this model on education, health, land reform, effective food distribution, and poverty alleviation. Despite low per capita incomes and a relatively weak industrial base, Kerala achieved nearly total literacy, long life expectancy, low infant and female mortality, low birth rates and high access to medical care. Between 1987 and 1991, the government launched the New Democratic Initiative which involved campaigns for development (including total literacy especially in science and environment) designed to involve people directly in development activities through voluntary citizens' organisations. The State has also taken initiative to involve people in making plans at the Panchayat block and district level.

Key Controversies

The strategy of development followed in the early years raised several important questions. Let us examine two of these disputes that continue to be relevant.

Agriculture versus industry

We have already touched upon a big question: between agriculture and industry, which one should attract more public resources in a backward economy like that of India? Many thought that the Second Plan backed an agrarian strategy for development, and the emphasis on industry caused agriculture and rural India to suffer. Gandhian economists like J. C. Kumarappa proposed an alternative blueprint that put greater emphasis on rural industrialisation. Chaudhary Charan Singh, a Congress leader who later broke from the party to form Bharatiya Lok Dal,

C. K. Narayana Rao
 (1932-1980): Original name: J. C. Cornelius; economist and chartered accountant; studied in England and USA; follower of M.K.Gandhi; tried to apply Gandhian principles in economic policies; author of 'Economy of Permanence'; participated in planning process as member of the Planning Commission.

forcefully articulated the case for keeping agriculture at the centre of planning for India. He said that the planning was failing in creation of prosperity in urban and industrial section at the expense of the farmers and rural population.

Others thought that without a drastic increase in industrial production, there would be no escape from the cycle of poverty. They argued that Indian planning did have an agriculture strategy to boost the production of food-grains. The state made laws for land reforms and distribution of resources among the poor in the villages. It also proposed programmes of community development and spent large sums on irrigation projects. The failure was not that of policy but its non-implementation, because the landowning classes

Let's Watch a Film

PATHER PANCHALI

This film tells the story of a poor family in a Bengal village and its struggle for survival. Durga, the daughter of Kellar and Subarnar, with her younger brother Asuke are enjoying the beauty of the thoughts and the purity. The two brothers regard the simple life and the efforts of the mother of Durga and Asuke to maintain the family.

Pather Panchali (Song of the Little Family) invites the viewer and transports him/her through the lens of the protagonist Pather, during various situations in and out with his brother Asuke. The film begins with joy, including a run for Durga....

The film won numerous awards nationally and internationally, including the President's Gold and Silver medals for the year 1956.

Year: 1955
Director: Satyajit Ray
Story: Bibhutibhushan
Screenplay: Bibhutibhushan
Screenplay by: Satyajit Ray
Actor: Kanan Devi, Ranjana, Ranjana Devi, Rishi Kapoor, Utpal Dutt, Shakti Kapoor, Utpal Dutt, Shakti Kapoor, Chhabi Biswas

large lot of social and political power. Hence, they also argue that even if the government had spent more money on agriculture it would not have solved the massive problem of rural poverty.

Public versus private sector

India did not follow any of the two known paths to development – it did not accept the capitalist model of development in which development was left entirely to the private sector, nor did it follow the socialist model in which private property was abolished and all the production was controlled by the state. Elements from both these models were taken and mixed together in India. That is why it was described as 'mixed economy'. Much of the agriculture, trade and industry were left in private hands. The state controlled key heavy industries, provided industrial infrastructure, regulated trade and made some crucial interventions in agriculture.

A mixed model like this was open to criticism from both the left and the right. Critics argued that the planners refused to provide the private sector with enough space and the stimulus to grow. The enlarged public sector produced powerful vested interests that created enough hurdles for private capital, especially by way of installing systems of licenses and permits for investment. Moreover, the state's policy to restrict import of goods that could be produced in the domestic market with little or no competition left the private sector with no incentive to improve their products and make them cheaper. The state controlled more things than were necessary and this led to inefficiency and corruption.

Inside the Public Sector are Central Ministers like Behnudt Bhushan, Aji Prasad Jain, Kailash Nath Katju, Jagannath Patnaik, T. T. Krishnamachari, Swaran Singh, Cabinet Law Minister and D. R. Mehta.

Then there were critics who thought that the state did not do enough. They pointed out that the state did not spend any significant amount for public education and healthcare. The state intervened only in those areas where the private sector was not prepared to go. Thus the state helped the private sector to make profit. Also, instead of helping the poor, the state intervention ended up creating a new "middle class" that enjoyed the privileges of high salaries without much accountability. Poverty did not decline substantially during this period; even when the proportion of the poor reduced, their numbers kept going up.

Major Outcomes

Of the three objectives that were identified in independent India, discussed in the first three chapters here, the third objective proved most difficult to realize. Land reforms did not take place effectively in most parts of the country; political power remained in the hands of the landowning classes; and big industrialists continued to benefit and thrive while poverty did not reduce much. The early initiatives for planned development were at best realising the goals of economic development of the country and well-being of all its citizens. The inability to take significant steps in this direction in the very first stage was to become a political problem. Those who benefited from untargeted development soon became politically powerful and made it even more difficult to move in the desired direction.

Foundations

An assessment of the outcomes of this early phase of planned development must begin by acknowledging the fact that in this period the foundations of India's future economic growth were laid. Some of the largest developmental projects in India's history were undertaken during this period. These included mega dams like Bhakra-Nangal and Hirakud for irrigation and power generation. Some of the heavy industries in the public sector — steel plants, oil refineries, manufacturing units, defense production etc. — were started during this period. Infrastructure for transport and communication was improved substantially. Of late, some of these mega projects have come in for a lot of criticism. Yet much of the later economic growth, including that by the private sector, may not have been possible in the absence of these foundations.

Government Campaign reaches the village

In a way the advertisement stuck or written on walls gave an accurate introduction to the village's problems and how to solve them. For example, the problem was that India was a farming nation, but farmers refused to produce more grain out of sheer perversity. The solution was to give speeches to farmers and show them all sorts of attractive pictures. These advised them that if they didn't want to grow more grain for themselves then they should do so for the nation. As a result the posters were stuck in various places to induce farmers to grow grain for the nation. The farmers were greatly influenced by the combined effect of the speeches and posters, and even most simple-minded cultivator began to feel the likelihood of there was some ulterior motive behind the whole campaign.

One advertisement had become especially well known in Shimalganj. It showed a healthy farmer with turban wrapped around his head, earnings and a quilted jacket, cutting a tall crop of wheat with a scythe. A woman was standing behind him, very pleased with herself; she was laughing like an official from the Department of Agriculture.

Below and above the picture was written in Hindi and English – 'Grow More Grain'. Farmers with earnings and a quilted jacket who were also scholars of English were expected to be won over by the English slogan, and those who were scholars of Hindi, by the Hindi version. And those who didn't know how to read either language could at least recognise the figures of the man and the laughing woman. The government hoped that as soon as they saw the man and the laughing woman, farmer would turn away from the poster and start growing more grain like men possessed.

Extract of translation from 'Raag' written by Shital Chauhan. The scene is set in a village Shimalganj in Uttar Pradesh in the 1950s.

Land reforms

In the agrarian sector, this period witnessed a serious attempt at land reforms. Perhaps the most significant and successful of these was the abolition of the colonial system of zamindari. This bold act not only released land from the clutches of a class that had little interest in agriculture, it also reduced the opacity of the landholdings to dominant politics. Attempts at consolidation of land – bringing small pieces of land together in one place so that the farm size could become viable for agriculture – were also fairly successful. But the other two components of land reforms were much less successful. Though the laws were made to put an upper limit or 'ceiling' to how much agricultural land one person could own, people with excess land managed to evade the law. Similarly, the tenants who worked on someone else's land were given greater legal security against eviction, but this provision was rarely implemented.

It was not easy to turn these well-meaning policies on agriculture into genuine and effective action. This could happen only if the rural, landless poor were mobilised. But the landowners were very powerful and wielded considerable political influence. Therefore, many proposals for land reforms were either not translated into laws, or, when made into

Q1. How did land reforms help in improving the quality of life?

Trying months ahead
despite rain: Minister
Next crop may be normal
Opposition warned not to exploit situation

Johnson 'ordered' freeze

Australia issued an 'alert'

Thirteen die of hunger in Bihar

Tribal areas worst hit adivasis live on root

JP call for relief workers, food

Industries give new commitments

Food Crisis

The agricultural situation went from bad to worse in the 1960s. Already, the rate of growth of food grain production in the 1940s and 1950s was barely staying above rate of population growth. Between 1955 and 1967, severe droughts occurred in many parts of the country. As we shall study in the next chapter, this was also the period when the country faced two wars and foreign exchange crisis. All this resulted in a severe food shortage and famine-like conditions in many parts of the country.

It was in Bihar that the food-crisis was most acutely felt as the state faced a near-famine situation. The food shortage was significant in all districts of Bihar, with 8 districts producing less than half of their normal output. Four of these districts, in fact, produced less than one-third of what they produced normally. Food deprivation subsequently led to acute and widespread malnutrition. It was estimated that the calorie intake dropped from 2200 per capita per day to as low as 1200 in many regions of the state (as against the requirement of 2400 per day for the average person). Death rate in Bihar in 1967 was 34, higher than the number of deaths that occurred in the following year. Food prices also hit a high in Bihar during the year, even when compared with other non-Indian states. For wheat and rice the prices in the state were twice or more than their prices in more prosperous Punjab. The government had "zoning" policies that prohibited trade of food across states; this reduced the availability of food in Bihar dramatically. In situations such as this, the poorest sections of the society suffered the most.

The food crisis had many consequences. The government had to import wheat and had to accept foreign aid, mainly from the US. Now the first priority of the planners was to somehow attain self-sufficiency in food. The entire planning process and sense of optimism and pride associated with it suffered a setback.

truly, they remained only on paper. This shows that economic policy is part of the actual political situation in the society. It also shows that in spite of good wishes of some top leaders, the dominant social groups would always effectively control policy making and implementation.

The Green Revolution

In the face of the prevailing food crisis, the country was clearly vulnerable to external pressures and dependent on food aid, mainly from the United States. The United States, in turn, pushed India to change its economic policies. The government adopted a new strategy for agriculture in order to ensure food sufficiency. Instead of the earlier policy of giving more support to the areas and farmers that were lagging behind, now it was decided to put more resources into those areas which already had irrigation and those farmers who were already well-off. The argument was that these who already had the capacity could help increase production rapidly in the short run. Thus the government offered high-yielding variety seeds, fertilisers, pesticides and better irrigation at highly subsidised prices. The government also gave a guarantee to buy the produce of the farmers at a given price. This was the beginning of what was called the 'green revolution'.

Why start an eat-in wheat revolution? And why does everything have to be 'revolution'?

The rich peasants and the large landholders were the major beneficiaries of the process. The green revolution delivered only a moderate agricultural growth (mainly a rise in wheat production) and ruined the availability of food in the country, but increased polarisation between classes and regions. Some regions like Punjab, Haryana and western Uttar Pradesh became agriculturally prosperous, while others remained backward. The green revolution had two other effects: one was that in many parts, the stark contrast between the poor peasantry and the landlords produced conditions favourable for Subsidies to farmers have always been another tool to manage a crisis. In general, most of the time, this was also their family's main source of income from the crops they harvested and marketed. Many times, the crops would stand in the fields for months or even years until the subsidy bill ended so we would have to come back when there was money again. The last time I went to your family, what was the cost of each kg of your vegetables? Any item they buy from the ration shop or a ration shop in the vicinity of your house or home and the cost of what is the difference in the prices of at least three commodities—vegetables, cooking oil, sugar—between the ration shop and the open market?

1965-1971

Fast forward to India 1980

You must be familiar with the jingle 'Utterly buttery delicious' and the endearing face of the little girl having a buttered toast. Yet, the Amul advertisements. Did you know that behind Amul products lies a successful history of cooperative dairy farming in India? Verghese Kurien, nicknamed the 'Milkingman of India', played a crucial role in the story of Gujarat Cooperative Milk and Marketing Federation Ltd that launched Amul.

Based in Anand, a town in Gujarat, Amul is a dairy cooperative movement joined by about 2 and half million milk producers in Gujarat. The Amul pattern became a uniquely appropriate model for rural development and poverty alleviation, something which has come to be known as the White Revolution. In 1970 the rural development programme called Operation Flood was started. Operation Flood organised cooperatives of milk producers into a nationwide milk grid, with the purposes of increasing milk production, bringing the producer and consumer closer by eliminating middlemen, and assuring the producer a regular income throughout the year. Operation Flood was, however, not just a dairy programme. It saw dairying as a path to development, for generating employment and income for rural households and alleviating poverty. The number of members of the cooperative has continued to increase with the numbers of women members and Women's Dairy Cooperative Societies also increasing significantly.

left-wing organisations to organise the poor peasants. Secondly, the green revolution also resulted in the rise of what is called the middle-peasant sections. These were farmers with medium size holdings, who benefited from the changes and soon emerged politically influential in many parts of the country.

Later developments

The story of development in India took a significant turn from the end of 1960s. You will see in Chapter Five how after Nehru's death the Congress system encountered difficulties. Indira Gandhi emerged as a popular leader. She decided to further strengthen the role of the state in controlling and directing the economy. The period from 1967 onwards witnessed many new restrictions on private industry. Fourteen private banks were nationalised. The government announced many pro-peas programs. These changes were accompanied by an ideological tilt towards socialist policies. This emphasis generated heated debates within the country among political parties and also among experts.

However, the consensus for a state-led economic development did not last forever. Planning did continue, but its salience was significantly reduced. Between 1980 and 1990 the Indian economy grew at a sluggish per annum rate of 3 to 3.5%. In view of the prevailing inefficiency and corruption in some public-sector enterprises and the not-so-positive role of the bureaucracy in economic development, the public opinion in the country lost the faith it initially placed in many of these institutions. Such lack of public faith led the policy makers to reduce the importance of the state in India's economy from the 1980s onwards. We shall look at that part of the story towards the end of this book.

Greta Garbo

EXERCISES

1. Which of these statements about the Bombay Plan is incorrect?
 (a) It was a blueprint for India's economic future
 (b) It supported state-control of industry
 (c) It was made by some leading industrialists
 (d) It supported strongly the idea of planning

2. Which of the following ideas did not form part of the early phase of India's development policy?
 (a) Planning
 (b) Liberalisation
 (c) Cooperative Farming
 (d) Self-sufficiency

3. The idea of planning in India was drawn from
 (a) the Bombay Plan
 (b) Sandan's vision of society
 (c) experiences of the Soviet-led countries
 (d) Demands by peasant organisations
 (e) All the above

- 4 Match the following:
- | | |
|---------------------|--------------------------------|
| (a) Charki Singh | I Industrialisation |
| (b) P C Mahalanobis | II Planning |
| (c) Bihar Famine | III Farmers' Milk Cooperatives |
| (d) Verghese Kurien | IV Irrigation |
- 5 What were the major differences in the approach towards development at the time of independence? Has the debate been resolved?
- 6 What was the major thrust of the First Five Year Plan? In which ways did the Second Plan differ from the first one?
- 7 What was the Green Revolution? Mention two positive and two negative consequences of the Green Revolution.
- 8 State the main arguments in the debate that ensued between industrialisation and agricultural development at the time of the Second Five Year Plan.
- 9 Indian policy makers made a mistake by emphasising the role of state in the economy. India could have developed much better if private sector was allowed a free play right from the beginning'. Give arguments for or against this proposition.
- 10 Read the following passage and answer the questions below.

"In the early years of independence two contradictory tendencies were already well advanced inside the Congress party. On the one hand, the national party espoused socialist principles of state ownership, regulation and control over key sectors of the economy in order to improve productivity and at the same time curb economic concentration. On the other hand, the national Congress government pursued liberal economic policies and incentives to private investment that was justified in terms of the sole criterion of achieving maximum increase in production." — Faizuddin Faizuddin

- (a) What is the contradiction that the author is talking about? What would be the political implications of a contradiction like this?
- (b) If the author is correct, why is it that the Congress was pursuing this policy? Was it related to the nature of the opposition parties?
- (c) Was there also a contradiction between the central leadership of the Congress party and its state-level leaders?

EXERCISES

Chandrasekharan Nair

In this chapter...

This far we have focussed in this book on the developments within the country and its domestic challenges. We now turn to the external challenges. Here too our leaders faced the challenge with an innovative response by way of the policy of non-alignment. But they also found themselves in conflict with neighbours. This led to three wars in 1962, 1965 and 1971. These wars, and the external relations in general, were shaped by and had its impact on the politics in the country.

In this chapter we study the story of the relationship between the external and the internal politics by focussing on:

- the international context that shaped India's external relations;
- the operational principles that informed the country's foreign policy;
- the history of India's relations with China and Pakistan; and
- the evolution of India's nuclear policy.

Actions with Neighbours
From China, Xiamen from Egypt, Suez from Indonesia and Tibet from Yugoslavia at the Non-Aligned conference in Bandung in 1955. These are considered the core leadership of the Non-Aligned Movement.

INDIA'S EXTERNAL RELATIONS

International context

India was born in a very trying and challenging international context. The world had witnessed a devastating war and was grappling with issues of reconstruction; yet another attempt to establish an intergovernmental body was underway; many new countries were emerging as a result of the collapse of colonialism; and most new nations were trying to come to terms with the twin challenges of welfare and democracy. Free India's foreign policy reflected all these concerns in the period immediately after Independence. Apart from these factors at the global level, India had its own share of concerns. The British government left behind the legacy of many international disputes; Partition created its own pressures; and the task of poverty alleviation was already waiting for fulfilment. This was the overall context in which India started participating in the world affairs as an independent nation-state.

As a nation born in the backdrop of the world war, India decided to conduct its foreign relations with an aim to respect the sovereignty of all other nations and to achieve security through the maintenance of peace. This aim finds an echo in the Directive Principles of State Policy—

Just as both internal and external factors guide the behaviour of an individual or a family, both domestic and international environment influence the foreign policy of a nation. The developing countries lack the required resources to effectively articulate their concerns in the international system. So they pursue more modest goals than the advanced states. They focus more on peace and development in their own neighbourhood. Moreover, their economic and security dependence on the more powerful states occasionally influences their foreign policy. In the period immediately after the Second World War, many developing nations chose to support the foreign policy preferences of the powerful countries who were giving them aid or credits. This resulted in the division of countries of the world into two clear camps. One was under the influence of the United States and its western allies and the other was under the influence of the then Soviet Union. You have read about this in the book on Contemporary World Politics. You have read there about the experiment called the Non-Aligned Movement. As you also read there, the end of the Cold War changed the context of international relations entirely. But when India achieved its freedom and started framing its foreign policy, the independence must be a cause, fundamentally and basically of foreign relations. That is the test of independence. All else is secondary. Our foreign relations go out of your hands into the charge of somebody else, to that extent and in that measure you are not independent.”

“
”

Jawaharlal Nehru
during a debate in the Constituent Assembly in March 1949.

The Constitutional principles

Article 51 of the Indian Constitution lays down some Directive Principles of State Policy on Promotion of international peace and security.

The State shall endeavour to –

- (a) Promote international peace and security
- (b) Maintain just and honourable relations between nations
- (c) Foster respect for international law and treaty obligations in the dealings of organized people with one another; and
- (d) Encourage settlement of international disputes by arbitration."

How well did the Indian state live up to these principles in the first two decades after independence? You may come back to this question after reading the chapter.

Cold War was just beginning and the world was getting divided into these two camps. Did India belong to any of these two camps in global politics of the fifties and the sixties? Was it successful in conducting its foreign policy peacefully and avoiding international conflicts?

Policy of non-alignment

The Indian national movement was an anti-imperialist program. It was a part of the worldwide struggle against colonialism and imperialism. It influenced the liberation movements of many Asian and African countries. Prior to India's independence, there were contacts between the nationalist leaders of India and those of other colonies, united as they were in their common struggle against colonialism and imperialism. The creation of the Indian National Army (INA) by Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose during the Second World War was the clearest manifestation of the linkages established between India and overseas Indians during the freedom struggle.

The foreign policy of a nation reflects the interplay of domestic and external factors. Therefore, the noble ideals that inspired India's struggle for freedom influenced the making of its foreign policy. But India's attainment of independence coincided with the beginning of the Cold War era. As you read in the first chapter of the book on Contemporary World Politics, this period was marked by the political, economic, and military confrontation at the global level between the two blocs led by the superpowers, the US and the USSR. The same period also witnessed developments like the establishment of the UN, the creation of nuclear weapons, the emergence of Communism,

It's the fourth chapter and IC's Nehru must again be a superhero! Or else the historians planned nothing.

China, and the beginning of globalisation. So India's leadership had to pursue its national interests within the prevailing international context.

Nehru's role

The first Prime Minister, Jawaharlal Nehru played a crucial role in setting the national agenda. He was his own foreign minister. Thus both as the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister, he exercised profound influence in the formulation and implementation of India's foreign policy from 1946 to 1964. The three major objectives of Nehru's foreign policy were to preserve the hard-earned sovereignty, protect territorial integrity, and promote rapid economic development. Nehru wished to achieve these objectives through the strategy of non-alignment. There were of course parties and groups in the country that believed that India should be more friendly with the US-led by US because that bloc claimed to be pro-democracy. Among those who thought on these lines were leaders like Dr Ambedkar. Some political parties, which were opposed to communism, also wanted India to follow a pro-US foreign policy. These included the Bharatiya Jan Sangh and later the Swatantra Party. But Nehru possessed considerable know-how in formulating the foreign policy.

Distance from two camps

The foreign policy of independent India apparently pursued the dream of a peaceful world by advocating the policy of non-alignment, by reducing the Cold War tensions and by contributing human resources to the UN peacekeeping operations. You might ask why India did not join either of the two camps during the Cold War era. India wanted to keep away from the military alliances led by US and Soviet Union against each other. As you have read in the book on Contemporary World Politics, during the Cold War, the US-led North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) and the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact came into existence. India advocated non-alignment as the ideal foreign policy approach. This was a difficult balancing act and sometimes the balance did not appear perfect. In 1956 when Britain attacked Egypt over the Suez canal issue, India led the world protest against this neo-colonial invasion. But in the same year when the USSR invaded Hungary, India did not join its public condemnation. Despite such situations, by and large India did take an independent stand on various international issues and could get aid and assistance from members of both the blocs.

While India was trying to convince the other developing countries about the policy of non-alignment, Pakistan joined the US-led military alliance. The US was not happy about India's independent initiatives and the policy of non-alignment. Therefore, there was a considerable “ Our general policy is to avoid alignment in power politics and not to join any group of powers or against any other group. The two leading groups today are the Eastern Bloc and the Anglo-American Bloc. We must be friendly to both and yet not join either. Both America and Russia are enormously suspicious of each other as well as of other countries. This makes our path difficult and we may well be suspected by each of leaning towards the other. This cannot be helped.

Jawaharlal Nehru
Letter to R. P. D.
Mitra, January
1948

Child can have more recognition and power in the world when he is more popular, poorer and more vulnerable than most other children.

66

A country without material, war or money...
the three means of power...
is now fast coming to be recognised as the biggest moral power in the world... her word listened to with respect in the councils of the great.

“ ”

C. Rajagopalachari:
Letter to Nehru
Mysore, 1950

unions in Indo-US relations during the 1950s. The US also resisted India's growing partnership with the Soviet Union.

You have studied in the last chapter, the strategy of planned economic development adopted by India. This policy emphasised import-substitution. The emphasis on developing a resource base also meant that export-oriented growth was limited. This development strategy limited India's economic interaction with the outside world.

Afro-Asian unity

With, given the size, location and power potential, Nehru envisaged a major role for India in world affairs and especially in Asian affairs. His era was marked by the establishment of contacts between India and other newly independent states in Asia and Africa. Throughout the 1940s and 1950s, Nehru had been an ardent advocate of Asian unity. Under his leadership, India convened the Asian Relations Conference in March 1947, five months ahead of attaining its independence. India made earnest efforts for the early realisation of freedom of Indonesia from the Dutch colonial regime by convening an international conference in 1949 to support the freedom struggle. India was a staunch supporter of the decolonisation process and firmly opposed racism, especially apartheid in South Africa. The Afro-Asian conference held in the Indonesian city of Bandung in 1955, commonly known as the Bandung Conference, marked the zenith of India's engagement with the newly independent Asian and African nations. The Bandung Conference later led to the establishment of the NAM. The First Summit of the NAM was held in Belgrade in September 1961. Nehru was a co-founder of the NAM (See Chapter 3 of Contemporary World Politics).

Peace and conflict with China

Unlike its relationship with Pakistan, free India began its relationship with China on a very friendly note. After the Chinese revolution in 1949, India was one of the first countries to recognise the communist government. Nehru felt strongly for this neighbour that was coming out of the shadow of western domination and helped the new government in international form. Some of his colleagues, like Vallabhbhai Patel, were worried about a possible Chinese aggression in future. But Nehru thought it was 'exceedingly unlikely' that India will face an attack from China. For a very long time, the Chinese border was guarded by para-military forces, not the army.

The joint enunciation of Panchsheel, the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, by the Indian Prime Minister Nehru and the Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai on 29 April 1954 was a step in the direction of stronger relationship between the two countries. Indian and Chinese leaders visited each other's country and were greeted by large and friendly crowds.

The Hindustan Times

INDIA OFFERS SANCTUARY TO THE DALAI LAMA

Arrival In NEFA
With 80 Others

LOK SABHA APPLAUDS
DALAI'S STATEMENT

AN EPIC ESCAPE

Dalai Lama Expected

Today

TIBET

The plateau of the central Asian region called Tibet is one of the major issues that historically caused tension between India and China. From time to time in history, China has claimed administrative control over Tibet. And from time to time, Tibet was independent too. In 1950, China took over control of Tibet. Large sections of the Tibetan population opposed this takeover. India tried to persuade China to recognise Tibet's claims for independence. When the Panchsheel agreement was signed between India and China in 1954, through one of its clauses about respecting each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty, India conceded China's claim over Tibet. The Tibetan spiritual leader Dalai Lama summoned the Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai during the official Chinese visit to India in 1954. He informed Henry about the worsening situation in Tibet. But China had already assured India that Tibet will be given greater autonomy than enjoyed by any other region of China. In 1959, there was armed uprising in Tibet against China's occupation. This was suppressed by the Chinese forces. Sensing that the situation had become worse, in 1959, the Dalai Lama crossed over into the Indian border and sought asylum which was granted. The Chinese government strongly protested against this. Over the last half century, a large number of Tibetans have also sought refuge in India and many other countries of the world. In India, particularly in Dehra Dun, there are large settlements of Tibetan refugees. Dharamshala in Himachal Pradesh is perhaps the largest refugee settlement of Tibetans in India. The Dalai Lama has also made Dharamshala his home in India. In the 1960s and 1970s many political leaders and parties in India including the Socialist Party and the Jan Sangh supported the cause of Tibet's independence.

China has created the Tibet autonomous region, which is an integral part of China. Tibetans oppose the Chinese claim that Tibet is part of Chinese territory. They also oppose the policy of bringing into Tibet more and more Chinese settlers. Tibetans dispute China's claim that autonomy is granted to the region. They think that China wants to undermine the traditional religion and culture of Tibet.

The Hindustan Times Weekly

Indian troops fall back in NEFA and Ladakh

Dhola, Khinzemane posts abandoned

Chinese advance pushed at heavy cost

"We will not live"

1962

China has numerical and logistic edge

Hindi Chini Bye Bye?

Amrit
Arun

लहूलिया

न दारा नेपा व लदाख द्वंद्व में एक साथ मीदगा आक्रम।
दो भारतीय दीवाली का प्रयत्न

Credit: H. B. Laxmi

V.P. Krishna Menon
(1897-1978)
Colonial and Warrior, soldier in the British Army UK
Between 1954-
1962, Indian Army
Commissioner in UK and head of India's delegation to UN. Major Satya Sai and his son Srinivasa member of the Union Cabinet from 1962. Defence Minister since 1957 conferred very close to Nehru.
Resigned after the India-China war in 1962.

“ friendly my impression of their leader was very favourable. The Chinese present at Tashiding a good type of man and trustworthy.

C. Rajagopalachari
In a letter, December 1956

I heard it from our grandfather Nehru:
Alarmed in public when Lata Mangeshkar sang Atmavivek when he began after the 1962 war.

The Chinese invasion, 1962

These developments strained this relationship. China invaded Tibet in 1950 and thus removed a historical buffer between the two countries. Initially, the government of India did not oppose this openly. But as more information came in about the suppression of Tibetan culture, the Indian government grew uneasy. The Tibetan spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, sought and obtained political asylum in India in 1959. China alleged that the government of India was allowing anti-China activities to take place from within India.

A little earlier, a boundary dispute had surfaced between India and China. India claimed that the boundary was a matter settled in colonial times, but China said that any colonial decision did not apply. The main dispute was about the western and the eastern end of the long border. China claimed two areas within the Indian territory: Aksai-Chin area in the Ladakh region of Jammu and Kashmir and much of the state of Arunachal Pradesh in what was then called NEFA (North Eastern Frontier Agency). Between 1957 and 1959, the Chinese occupied the Aksai-Chin area and built a strategic road there. Despite a very long correspondence and discussions among top leaders, these differences could not be resolved. Several small border skirmishes between the armies of the two countries took place.

Do you remember the Cuban Missile Crisis in Chapter One of the Contemporizing World Politics? While the entire world's attention was on this crisis involving the two superpowers, China launched a swift and massive invasion in October 1962 on both the disputed regions. The first attack lasted one week and Chinese forces captured some key areas in Arunachal Pradesh. The second wave of attack came next month. While the Indian forces could block the Chinese advances on the western front in Ladakh, in the east the Chinese managed to advance nearly to the entry point of Assam plains. Finally, China declared a unilateral ceasefire and its troops withdrew to where they were before the invasion began.

The China war dented India's image at home and abroad. India had to approach the Americans and the British for military assistance to tide over the crisis. The Soviet Union remained neutral during the conflict. It induced a sense of national humiliation and at the same time strengthened a spirit of nationalism. Some of the top ministry communists either resigned or were retired. Nehru's close associate and the then Defence Minister, V. Krishna Menon, had to leave the cabinet. Nehru's own stature suffered as he was severely criticised for his naïve assessment of the Chinese intentions and the lack of military preparedness. For the first time, a no-confidence motion against his government was moved and debated in the Lok Sabha. Soon thereafter, the Congress lost some key by-elections to Lok Sabha. The political mood of the country had begun to change.

Fast Forward

Sino-Indian relations since 1962

It took more than a decade for India and China to resume normal relations. It was in 1976 that full diplomatic relations were restored between the two countries. Atal Bihari Vajpeyi was the first top-level leader from India to visit China in 1978. Later, Ravi Shankar became the first Prime Minister after Nehru to visit China. Since then, the emphasis is more on better relations between the two countries. In the book Contemporary World Politics, you have already read about these developments.

The Sino-Indian conflict affected the opposition as well. This and the growing rift between China and the Soviet Union created irreconcilable differences within the Communist Party of India (CPI). The pro-USSR faction remained within the CPI and moved towards closer ties with the Congress. The other faction was far more close to China and was against any ties with the Congress. The party split in 1964 and the leaders of the latter faction formed Communist Party of India (Marxist) (CPI-M). In the wake of China war, many leaders of what became CPI (M) were arrested for being pro-China.

The war with China altered Indian leadership to the volatile situation in the Northeast region. Apart from being isolated and extremely underdeveloped, this region also presented India with the challenge of national integration and political unity. The process of reorganisation began soon after the China war. Nagaland was granted statehood; Manipur and Tripura, though Union Territories, were given the right to elect their own legislative assemblies.

Let's Watch a Film

Haqeqat

A small group of Indian men is recruited by the Chinese in Lhasa to repair the ancient Kora road. The young and experienced Tibetans, Tenzin, Gom, Tenzin, Sonam, and his guru Jamphel Karmo help the Indians repair the path. But Tenzin's youth and poor, Sun Tenzin's Singh and Karmo die while repairing the Chinese border. So the Indians too, die and grow old by the country and lay down their lives for the country.

Set in the backdrop of the China war of 1962, this film portrays the culture and the bonds of its central theme. It pays tribute to the soldiers who depicted their fight and the political repression over the people in Lhasa. The film uses documentary footage of real scenes and is considered to one of the best war films made in India.

Year: 1984
Director: Chetan Anand
Actor: Chetan Anand, Pradeep Sabharwal, Brijendra Kala, Jayant, Gurjeet Ahluwalia, Arun

Wars and Peace with Pakistan

In the case of Pakistan the conflict started just after Partition over the dispute on Kashmir. You will read more about the dispute in Chapter 8. A proxy war broke out between Indian and Pakistani army in Kashmir during 1947 itself. But this did not turn into a full war. The issue was then referred to the UN. Pakistan soon emerged as a critical factor in India's relations with the US and subsequently with China.

The Kashmir conflict did not prevent cooperation between the governments of India and Pakistan. Both the governments worked together to restore the women abducted during Partition to their original families. A long-term dispute about the sharing of river waters was resolved through mediation by the World Bank. The India-Pakistan Indus Waters Treaty was signed by Nehru and General Ayub Khan in 1960. Despite all ups and downs in the Indo-Pak relations, this treaty has worked well.

A more serious armed conflict between the two countries began in 1965. As you would read in the next chapter, by then Lal Bahadur Shastri had taken over as the Prime Minister. In April 1965 Pakistan launched armed attacks in the Kutch area of Gujarat. This was followed by a bigger offensive in Jammu and Kashmir in August-September. Pakistani rulers were hoping to get support from the local population there, but it did not happen. In order to ease the pressure on the Kashmir front, Shastri ordered Indian troops to launch a counter-offensive on the Punjab border. In a fierce battle, the Indian army reached close to Lahore.

The hostilities came to an end with the UN intervention. Later, Indian Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Pakistan's General Ayub Khan signed the Tashkent Agreement, brokered by the Soviet Union, in January 1966. Though India could inflict considerable military loss on Pakistan, the 1965 war added to India's already difficult economic situation.

Bangladesh war, 1971

Beginning in 1970, Pakistan faced its biggest internal crisis. The country's first general election produced a split verdict - Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's party emerged a winner in West Pakistan, while the Awami League led by Sheikh Mujib ur Rahman swept through East Pakistan. The Bengali population of East Pakistan had voted to protest against years of being treated as second class citizens by the rulers based in West Pakistan. The Pakistani rulers were not willing to accept the democratic verdict. Nor were they ready to accept the Awami League's demand for a federation.

Instead, in early 1971, the Pakistani army arrested Sheikh Mujib and unleashed a reign of terror on the people of East Pakistan. In

The Times of India

THE TIMES OF INDIA, LTD., NEW DELHI, INDIA
12 NOVEMBER 1965

25

OUR TROOPS ON OUTSKIRTS OF LAHORE IAF Planes Blast Military Installations PAK FORCES ON THE RUN IN CHAMB AREA Jaurian In Flames: Success In Uri Sector Too

"The Times of India" News Service

BLACK-OUT IS ORDERED IN GREATER BOMBAY

Indo-Pak
Flights Cancelled

The Hindustan Times

THE HINDUSTAN TIMES VALKOT-PASUR RAILWAY TAKEN

IAF pounds Sargodha, Chak Jhumra airports withdrawing in disorder

1965

The Hindustan Times

TROOPS MARCH INTO PAKISTAN

Times
of India
News Service

The united like joined like like, can we say this we were not divided.
Now, after seeing this party with the Soviet Union?

Refugee influx threatens peace
India warns Pak

In response to this, the people started a struggle to liberate 'Bangladesh' from Pakistan. Throughout 1971, India had to bear the burden of about 80 lakh refugees who fled East Pakistan and took shelter in the neighbouring areas in India. India extended moral and material support to the freedom struggle in Bangladesh. Pakistan accused India of a conspiracy to break it up.

Support for Pakistan came from the US and China. The US-China rapprochement that began in the late 1960s resulted in a reaggregation of forces in Asia. Henry Kissinger, the adviser to the US President Richard Nixon, made a secret visit to China via Pakistan in July 1971, in order to counter the US-Pakistan-China axis. India signed a 20-year Treaty of Peace and Friendship with the Soviet Union in August 1971. This treaty assured India of Soviet support if the country faced any attack.

After months of diplomatic tension and military build-up, a full-scale war between India and Pakistan broke out in December 1971. Pakistani aircraft attacked Punjab and Haryana, while the army moved on the Jammu and Kashmir front. India retaliated with an attack involving the air force, navy and the army on both the Western and the Eastern front. Welcomed and supported by the local population, the Indian army made rapid progress in East Pakistan. Within ten days the Indian army had surrounded Dhaka from three sides and the Pakistani army of about 90,000 had to surrender. With Bangladesh as a free country, India declared a unilateral ceasefire. Later, the signing of the Shimla Agreement between Indira Gandhi and Zulfikar Ali Bhutto on 3 July 1972 formalised the return of peace.

A decisive victory in the war led to national jubilation. Most people in India saw this as a moment of glory and a clear sign of India's growing military prowess. As you would read in the next chapter, Indira Gandhi was the Prime Minister at this time. She had already won the Lok Sabha elections in 1971. Her personal popularity soared

Fast Forward: Kargil Confrontation

In the early part of 1999 several points on the India side of the LoC in the Ladakh area, Kargil and Batalik areas were occupied by forces claiming to be Moslimes. Suspecting involvement of the Pakistani Army, Indian forces started moving to this occupation. This led to a confrontation between the two countries. This is known as the Kargil conflict. The conflict went on during May and June 1999. By 26 July 1999, India had recovered control of many of the lost points. The Kargil conflict drew attention worldwide for the reason that they were few, but both India and Pakistan had suffered massive casualties. However, the conflict remained confined only to the Kargil region. In Pakistan, this conflict has been the source of a major controversy as it was alleged later that the Prime Minister of Pakistan was held in the dark by the Army Chief. Soon after the conflict, the government of Pakistan was taken over by the Pakistan Army, led by the Army Chief General Pervez Musharraf.

THE TIMES OF INDIA

YAHYA YIELDS TO INDIRA, ENDS WAR

Somersault by General as 1971 hails Delhi keeps out

Remain alert, warn

PAK planes

16

THE HINDUSTAN TIMES

MUJIB TAKES OVER 'BANGLA DESH'

PAK PLANES BOMB BANGLA DESH

Freedom fighters blow up bridges

Indonesia
Sri Lanka
Asia over

further after the 1971 war. After the war, assembly elections in most states took place, bringing large majorities for the Congress party in many states.

India, with its limited resources, had initiated development planning. However, conflicts with neighbours delayed the five-year plans. These extra resources were diverted to the defence sector especially after 1962, as India had to embark on a military modernisation drive. The Department of Defence Production was established in November 1962 and the Department of Defense Supplies in November 1965. The Third Plan (1961–68) was affected and it was followed by three Annual Plans and the Fourth Plan could be initiated only in 1968. India's defence expenditure increased enormously after the war.

India's nuclear policy

Another crucial development of this period was the first nuclear explosion undertaken by India in May 1974. Nehru had always put his faith in science and technology for rapidly building a modern India. A significant component of his industrialisation plans was the nuclear programme initiated in the late 1940s under the guidance of Homi J. Bhabha. India wanted to generate atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Nehru was against nuclear weapons. So he pleaded with the superpowers for comprehensive nuclear disarmament. However, the nuclear ascent kept rising. When Communist China conducted nuclear tests in October 1964, the five nuclear weapon powers, the US, USSR, UK, France, and China (Taiwan then represented China – then the five Permanent Members of the UN Security Council – tried to impose the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) of 1968 on the rest of the world. India always considered the NPT as discriminatory and had refused to sign it. When India conducted its first nuclear test, it was termed as peaceful explosion. India argued that it was committed to the policy of using nuclear power only for peaceful purposes.

The period when the nuclear test was conducted was a difficult period to domestic politics. Following the Arab-Israeli War of 1973, the entire world was affected by the Oil Shock due to the massive hike in the oil prices by the Arab nations. It led to economic turmoil in India resulting in high inflation. As you will read in Chapter 16, many agitations were going on in the country around this time, including a nationwide railway strike.

Although there are intrinsic differences among political parties about how to conduct external relations, Indian politics is generally marked by a broad agreement among the parties on national integration, protection of international boundaries, and on questions of national interest. Therefore, we find that in the course of the decade of 1962–1972, when India faced three wars, or even later, when different parties came to power from time to time, foreign policy has played only a limited role in party politics.

I am confused! Isn't it all about peace? Is India? Why don't we sign it?

Fast Forward: India's Nuclear Programs

India has opposed the international treaties aimed at non-proliferation since they were selectively applicable to the non-nuclear powers and legitimised the monopoly of the five nuclear weapons powers. Thus, India opposed the indefinite extension of the NPT in 1985 and also refused to sign the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT).

India conducted a series of nuclear tests in May 1998, demonstrating its capacity to use nuclear energy for military purposes. Pakistan soon followed thereby increasing the vulnerability of the region to a nuclear exchange. The international community was severely critical of the nuclear tests in the subsequent assessments which imposed on both India and Pakistan which were subsequently waived. India's nuclear doctrine of credible minimum nuclear deterrence professes 'no first use' and reiterates India's commitment to global, verifiable and non-discriminatory nuclear disarmament leading to a nuclear weapons free world.

Shifting alliances in world politics:

As you will read in Chapter Six and again Chapter Nine, many non-Congress governments came to power in the period starting 1977. This was also the time when world politics was changing dramatically. What did it mean for India's external relations?

The Janata Party government that came to power in 1977 announced that it would follow genuine non-alignment. This implied that the pro-Soviet tilt in the foreign policy will be corrected. Since then, all governments (Congress or non-Congress) have taken initiatives for restoring better relations with China and entering into close ties with US. In Indian politics and in power too, India's foreign policy is always very closely linked to two questions. One is India's stand vis-à-vis Pakistan and the other is Indo-US relations. In the post-1990 period the ruling parties have often been criticised for their pro-US foreign policy.

Foreign policy is always dictated by ideas of national interest. In the period after 1990, Russia, though it continues to be an important friend of India, has lost its global pre-eminence. Therefore, India's foreign policy has shifted to a more pro-US strategy. Besides, the contemporary international situation is more influenced by economic interests than by military interests. This has also made an impact on India's foreign policy decisions. At the same time, Indo-Pakistani relations have witnessed many new developments during this period. While Kashmir continues to be the main issue between the two countries, there have been nearly efforts to restore normal relations. This means that cultural exchanges, movement of citizens and economic cooperation would be encouraged by both countries. Do you know that a train and a bus service operate between these two countries? This has been a major achievement of the recent times. But that could not end the long-war situation from emerging in 1999. Even after the setback in the peace process, efforts at negotiating durable peace have been going on.

EXERCISES

1. Write 'true' or 'false' against each of these statements:
 - (a) Non-alignment allowed India to gain assistance both from USA and USSR.
 - (b) India's relationship with her neighbours has been strained from the beginning.
 - (c) The cold war has affected the relationship between India and Pakistan.
 - (d) The Treaty of Peace and Friendship in 1971 was the result of India's accession to USA.

2. Match the following:

(a) The goal of India's foreign policy in the period 1950-1964	v. Trilateral summit leader who crossed over to India
(b) Panchsheel	x. Preservation of national integrity, some slight aid, economic development
(c) Bandung Conference	iii. Five principles of peaceful coexistence
(d) Cagai Lam	ii. Led to the establishment of NAM

3. Why did Nehru regard conduct of foreign relations as an essential indicator of independence? State any two reasons with examples to support your reading.

4. The conduct of foreign affairs is an outcome of a two-way interaction between domestic compulsions and 'prevailing international circumstances'. Take one example from India's external relations in the 1980s to substantiate your answer.

5. Identify any two aspects of India's foreign policy that you would like to retain and two that you would like to change, if you were to become a decision maker. Give reasons to support your position.

6. Write short notes on the following:
 - (a) India's nuclear policy
 - (b) Consensus in foreign policymaking

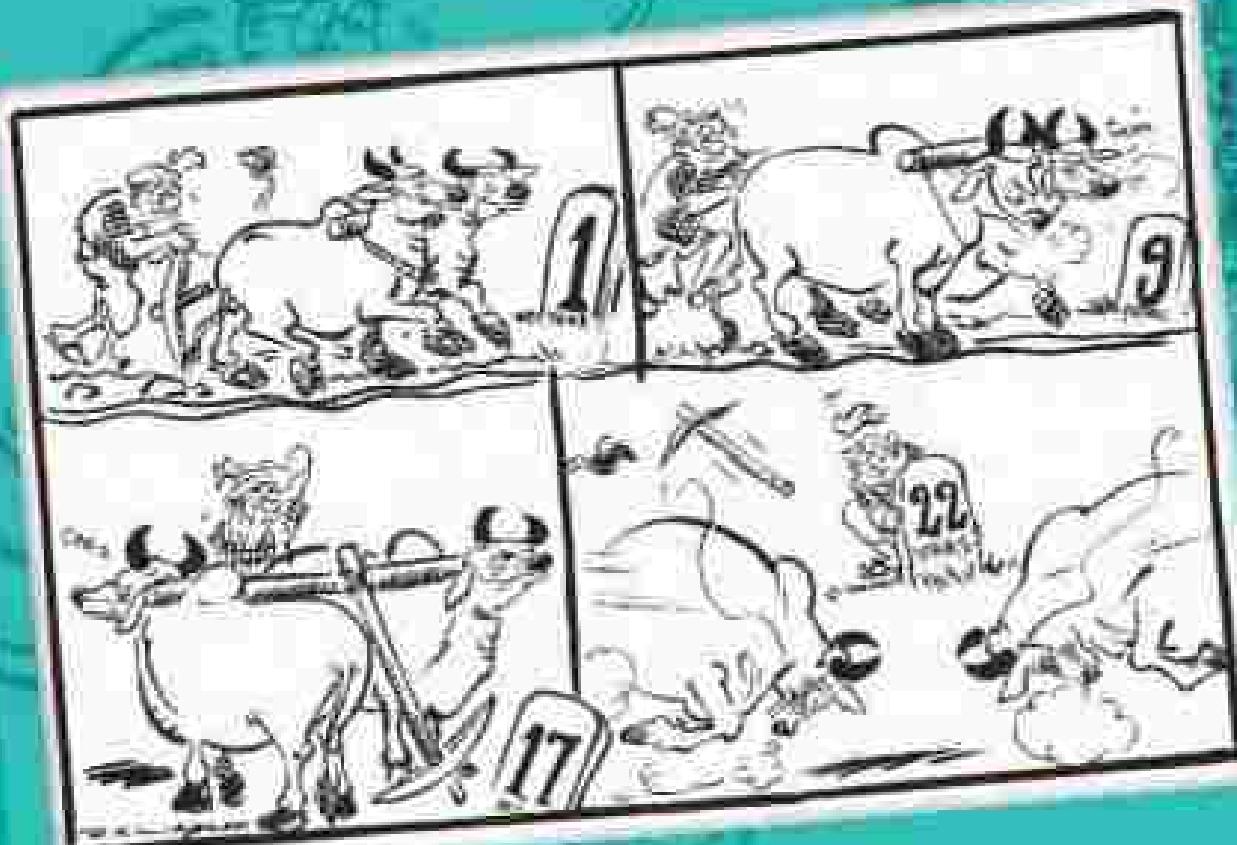

7. India's foreign policy was built around the principles of peace and cooperation. But India fought three wars in a space of ten years between 1962 and 1971. Would you say that this was a failure of the foreign policy? Or would you say that this was a result of 'international situation'? Give reasons to support your answer.

- Q. Does India's foreign policy reflect her desire to be an important regional power? Argue your case with the Bangladesh war of 1971 as an example.
- Q. How does political leadership of a nation affect its foreign policy? Explain this with the help of examples from India's foreign policy.

16. Read this passage and answer the questions below.

"Broadly, non-alignment means not tying yourself off with military blocs... It means trying to see things, as far as possible, not from the military point of view, though that has to come in sometimes; but independently, and trying to maintain friendly relations with all countries." — Jawaharlal Nehru

- Why does Nehru want to keep off military blocs?
- Do you think that the Indo-Soviet Friendship treaty violated the principle of non-alignment? Give reasons for your answer.
- If there were no military blocs, do you think non-alignment would have been unnecessary?

In this chapter...

In Chapter Two we read about the emergence of the Congress system. This system was first challenged during the 1960s. As political competition became more intense, the Congress found it difficult to retain its dominance. It faced challenges from the opposition that was more powerful and less divided than before. The Congress also faced challenges from within, as the party could no longer accommodate all kinds of differences. In this chapter we pick the story from where we left it in Chapter Two, in order to - understand how the political transition took place after Nehru;

- describe how the opposition unity and the Congress split posed a challenge to Congress dominance;
- explain how a new Congress led by Indira Gandhi overcame these challenges; and
- analyse how new policies and ideologies facilitated the restoration of the Congress system.

Originally the election symbol of the Congress was a pair of bullocks. This famous cartoon depicts the changes within the Congress leading to a total re-orientation in the 22nd year after independence.

CHALLENGES TO AND RESTORATION OF THE CONGRESS SYSTEM

Challenge of Political succession

Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru passed away in May 1964. He had been unwell for more than a year. This had generated a lot of speculation about the usual question of succession: after Nehru, who? But in a newly independent country like India, this situation gave rise to a more serious question: after Nehru, what?

The second question arose from the serious doubts that many outsiders had about whether India's democratic experiment will survive after Nehru. It was feared that like so many other newly independent countries, India too would not be able to manage a democratic succession. A failure to do so, it was feared, could lead to a political role for the army. Besides, there were doubts if the new leadership would be able to handle the multiple crises that awaited a solution. The 1960s were labelled as the 'dangerous decade' when

Shastri as Prime Minister
 Lal Bahadur Shastri
 (1916-1974)
 Prime Minister of India appointed in the freedom Government since 1966, minister in UP cabinet
 General Secretary of Congress Minister of Union Cabinet from 1961 to 1964 before resigning taking responsibility for the rail accident and soon from 1964 to 1966 coined his famous slogan 'Jai Jawan Jai Kisan'.
 Death: 1974

“...now Prime Minister of India, in spite of all jibes, has been named with more respect, and much more dignity, than ever the new Prime Minister of India.”

Published in The Guardian, London, 3 June 1966, comparing the political succession after Nehru with the succession drama after Marshal Marshall in France.

unresolved problems like poverty, inequality, communal and regional divisions etc. could lead to a failure of the democratic project or even the disintegration of the country.

From Nehru to Shastri

The ease with which the succession after Nehru took place proved all the critics wrong. When Nehru passed away, K. Kamaraj, the president of the Congress party consulted party leaders and Congress members of Parliament and found that there was a consensus in favour of Lal Bahadur Shastri. He was unanimously chosen as the leader of the Congress parliamentary party and thus became the country's next Prime Minister. Shastri was a less controversial leader from Uttar Pradesh who had been a Minister in Nehru's cabinet for many years. Nehru had come to depend a lot on him in his last year. He was known for his simplicity and his commitment to principles. Earlier he had resigned from the position of Railway Minister accepting moral responsibility for a major railway accident.

Shastri was the country's Prime Minister from 1964 to 1966. During Shastri's brief Prime Ministership, the country faced two major challenges. While India was still recovering from the economic implications of the war with China, failed monsoons, drought and serious food crisis presented a grave challenge. As discussed in the previous chapter, the country also faced a war with Pakistan in 1965. Shastri's famous slogan 'Jai Jawan Jai Kisan', symbolised the country's resolve to face both these challenges.

Shastri's Prime Ministership came to an abrupt end on 10 January 1966, when he suddenly expired in Tashkent, then in USSR and currently the capital of Uzbekistan. He went there to discuss and sign an agreement with Muhammad Ayub Khan, the then President of Pakistan, to end the war.

From Shastri to Indira Gandhi

Thus the Congress faced the challenge of political succession for the second time in two years. This time there was an intense competition between Morarji Desai and Indira Gandhi. Morarji Desai had earlier served as Chief Minister of Bombay state (now Maharashtra and Gujarat) and also as a Minister at the centre. Indira Gandhi, the daughter of Jawaharlal Nehru, had been Congress President in the past and had also been Union Minister for Information in the Shastri cabinet. This time the senior leaders in the party decided to back Indira Gandhi, but the decision was not unanimous. The contest was resolved through a secret ballot among Congress MPs. Indira Gandhi defeated Morarji Desai by securing the support of more than two-thirds of the party's MPs. A peaceful transition of power, despite intense competition for leadership, was seen as a sign of maturity of India's democracy.

It took some time before the new Prime Minister could settle down. While Indira Gandhi had been politically active for very long, she had served as a minister under Lal Bahadur Shastri only for a short period. The senior Congress leaders may have supported Indira Gandhi in the belief that her administrative and political inexperience would compel her to be dependent on them for support and guidance. Within a year of becoming Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi had to lead the party in a Lok Sabha election. Around this time, the economic situation in the country had further deteriorated, adding to her problems. Faced with these difficulties, she set out to gain control over the party and to demonstrate her leadership skills.

Indira Gandhi (1917–1984) Prime Minister of India from 1966 to 1977 and 1980 to 1984, daughter of Jawaharlal Nehru, participated in the freedom struggle as a young Congress worker, Congress President in 1966, minister in Shastri's cabinet from 1964–66, as the Congress party to victory in 1967, 1971 and 1972 general elections; credited with the slogan 'Garibi Hatao', victory in 1971 was due for policy initiatives like abolition of Privy Purse, nationalisation of banks, nuclear test and environmental protection assassination on 31 October 1984

Credit: Getty Images

Fourth General Elections, 1967

The year 1967 is considered a landmark year in India's political and electoral history. In Chapter Two you read about how the Congress party was the dominant political force throughout the country from 1952 onwards. This trend was to undergo significant changes with the 1967 elections.

Context of the elections

In the years leading up to the fourth general elections, the country witnessed major changes. Two Prime Ministers had died in quick succession, and the new Prime Minister, who was being seen as a political novice, had been in office for less than a year. You will recall from the discussion in Chapter Three and in the previous sections of this chapter that the period was fraught with grave economic crisis resulting from successive failure of monsoons, widespread drought, decline in agricultural production, serious food shortage, depletion of foreign exchange reserves, drop in industrial production and exports, combined with a sharp rise in military expenditure and diversion of resources from planning and economic development. One of the first decisions of the Indira Gandhi government was to devalue the Indian rupee, under what was seen to be pressure from the US. Earlier one US dollar could be purchased for less than Rs. 5; after devaluation it cost more than Rs. 7.

The economic situation triggered off price rise. People started protesting against the increase in prices of essential commodities, food scarcity, growing unemployment and the overall economic condition in the country. Riots and hartals were called frequently across the country. The government saw the protests as a law and order problem and not as expressions of people's problems. This further increased public bitterness and reinforced popular unrest.

The communist and socialist parties launched struggles for greater equality. You will read in the next chapter about how a group of communists who separated from the Communist Party of India (Marxist) to form the Communist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist) led mass agrarian struggles and organised peasant uprisings. This period also witnessed some of the worst Hindu-Muslim riots since independence.

Non-Congressism

This situation could not have remained isolated from party politics in the country. Opposition parties were in the forefront of organising public protests and pressurising the

Election in a Rajasthan Village

This is a story about 1967 assembly elections in the Chotu constituency. The main names in the fray were Congress and the Swantantra Party. But village Devsar had its own local political dynamics and it got mixed up with the competition between the two parties. Sher Singh traditionally dominated village politics but gradually his nephew, Bhim Singh was emerging as the more popular leader and role. Though both were Rajputs, Bhim Singh cultivated the support of many non-Rajputs in the village by attending to their requirements after becoming the panchayat Pradhan. So, he struck a new equation: the alliance of Rajputs and non-Rajputs.

He proved to be more adept in building alliances across the village by supporting candidates in other villages for the posts of village Pradhan. In fact, he took an initiative and took a delegation to the State Chief Minister and Congress leader Mohan Lal Sukhadia for pressing the name of one of his friends from a nearby village as Congress candidate in the Assembly election. When Sukhadia conveyed him of some other name, Bhim Singh, in turn, convinced many others that they should work for the party candidate. Bhim Singh knew that if the party candidate won from this constituency, that candidate would become a minister and thus he would have direct contacts with the minister for the first time.

Sher Singh had no option but to work for the Swantantra candidate, who was a jagirdar. He kept telling people that the jagirdar would help build the village school and use his resources for the development of the locality. At least in Devsar village, the Assembly election had turned into a factional fight between uncle and nephew.

Based on Non-Congressism: Role in Chotu Assembly Constituency in 1967

“...in India, as power must continue... members of an armed service of society is going to step out of ranks of an armed service of civil government and the army will be only alternative source of authority and rule... the great experience of employing public opinion & democratic movement has failed.

”

Neville Maxwell
India's Disappearing Democracy an article published in the London Times, 1987.

government. Parties opposed to the Congress realised that the division of their votes kept the Congress in power. Thus parties that were entirely different and disparate in their programmes and ideology got together to form anti-Congress fronts in some states and entered into electoral understandings of sharing seats in others. They felt that the inexperience of Indira Gandhi and the internal factionalism within the Congress provided them an opportunity to topple the Congress. The socialist leader Hara Mahadev Lohia gave this strategy the name of 'non-Congressism'. He also produced a theoretical argument in its defense. Congress rule was undemocratic and opposed to the interests of ordinary poor people; therefore the coming together of the non-Congress parties was necessary for reclaiming democracy by the people.

C. Subrahmanyam
(1931-91) Chief Minister of Madras/Tamil Nadu from 1989 to 1991. Politician and orator closely associated with the Justice Party in Madras province and joined Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) formed DMK as a separate party in 1964. A proponent of Dravidian culture he was opposed to imposition of Hindi and had the anti-Hindi agitations supported by other anti-Hindi groups.

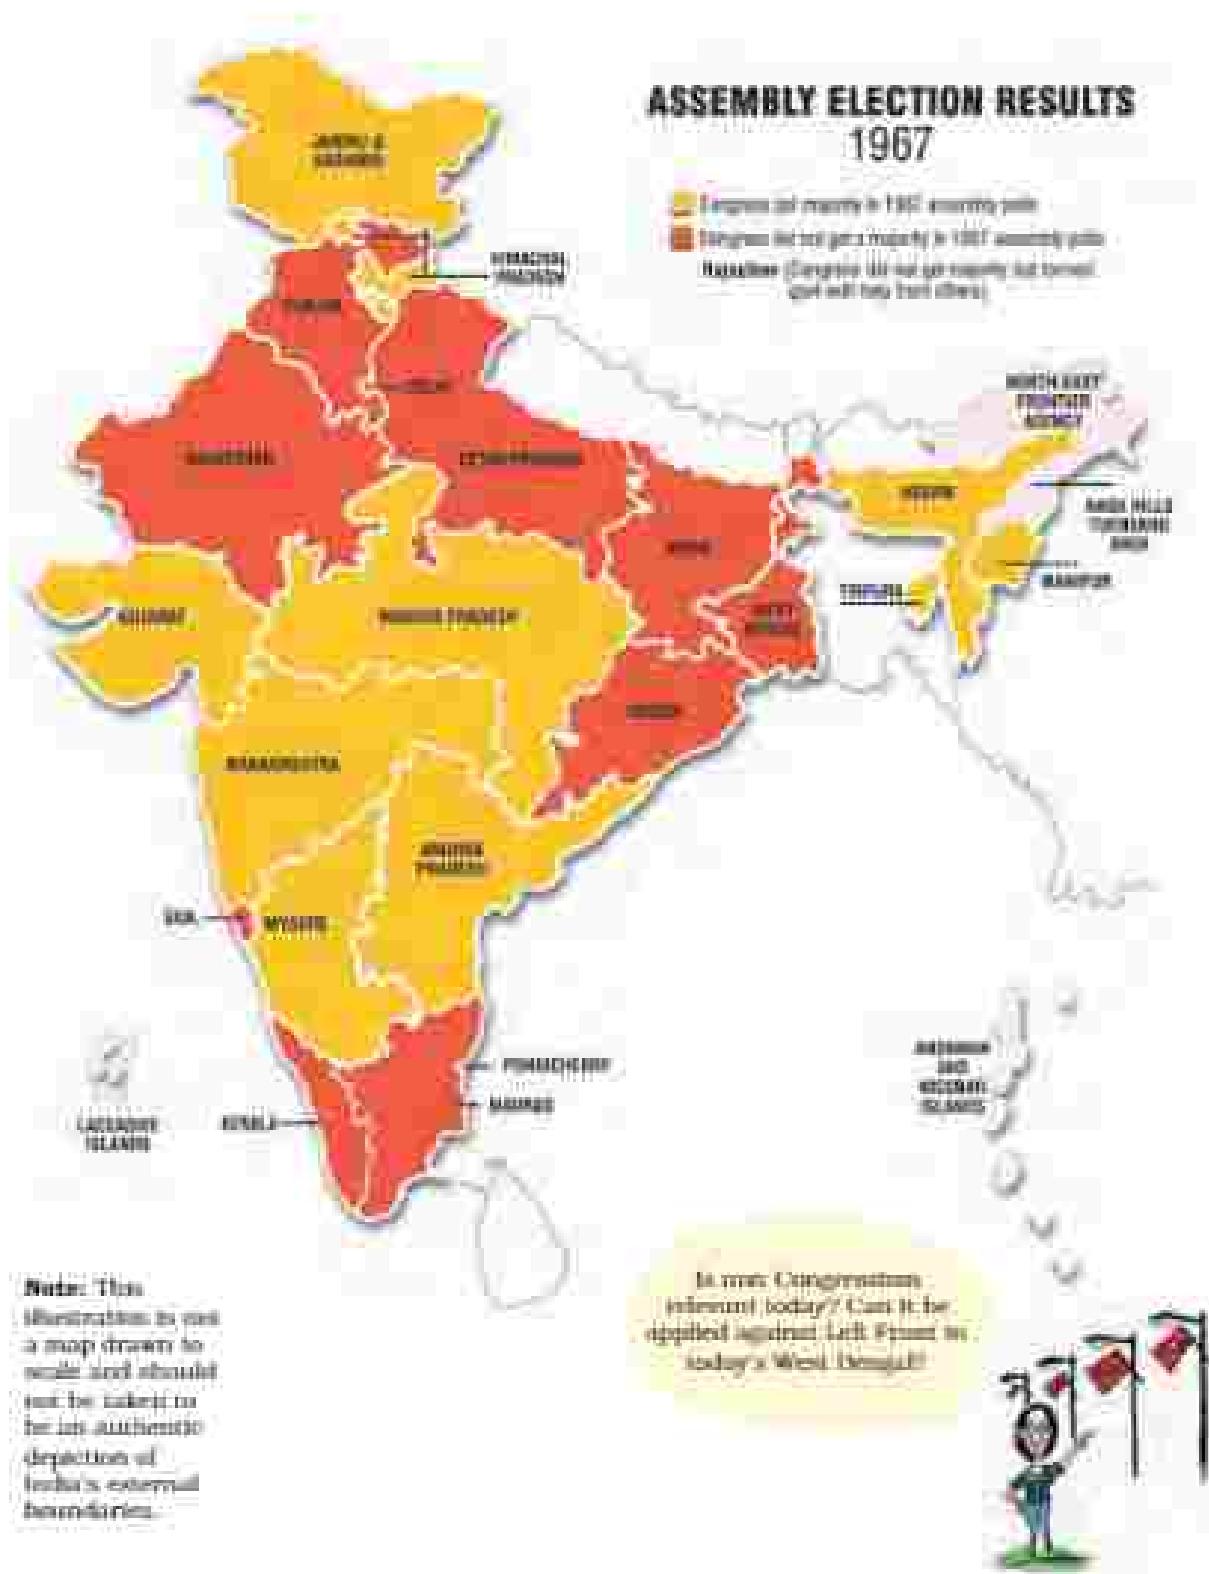

Jayaprakash Narayan (1917-90)
Socialist leader and thinker, freedom fighter and among the founders of the Congress Socialist Party after the split in the party.

JP, the leader of the Socialist Party and later the Samyukt-Socialist Party (Merged - Lok Sabha 1982-87). Founder editor of Navahrsti and Jay known for original contribution to non-Eurocentric socialist theory. JP's political career best known for sharp attacks on Nehru's strategy of non-Congressism, advocacy of reservation for backward classes and opposition to English.

Electoral verdict

It was in this context of heightened popular discontent and the polarisation of political forces that the fourth general elections to the Lok Sabha and State Assemblies were held in February 1989. The Congress was facing the electorate for the first time without Nehru.

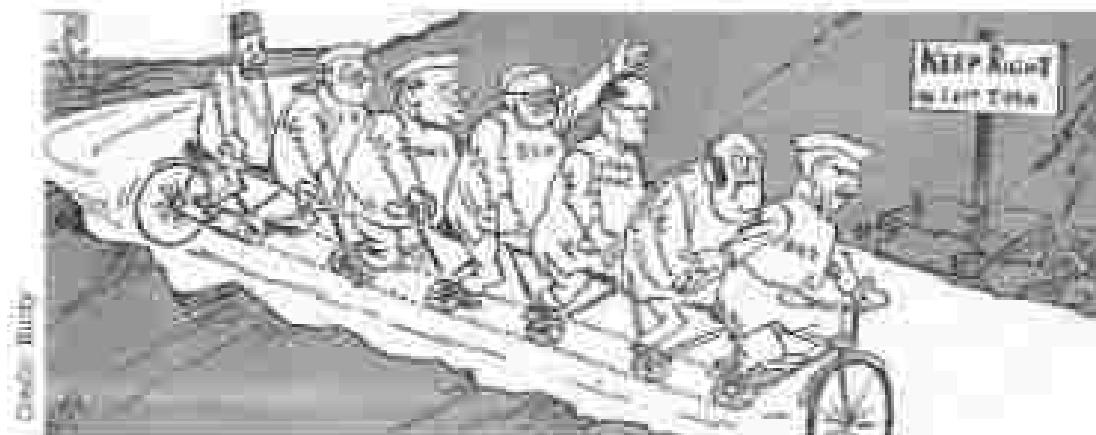

The results jolted the Congress at both the national and state levels. Many contemporary political observers described the election results as a 'political earthquake'. The Congress did manage to get a majority in the Lok Sabha, but with its lowest tally of seats and share of votes since 1952. Half the ministers in Indira Gandhi's cabinet were defeated. The political stalwarts who lost in their constituencies included Samundri in Tamil Nadu, S.K. Patil in Maharashtra, Atulya Ghosh in West Bengal and K. H. Salunji in Bihar.

The dramatic nature of the political change would be more apparent to you at the State level. The Congress lost majority in as many as seven States. In two other States defections prevented it from forming a government. These nine States where the Congress lost power were spread across the country – Punjab, Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, West Bengal, Odisha, Madras and Kerala. In Madras State (now called Tamil Nadu), a regional party – the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) – came to power by securing a clear majority. The DMK won power after having led a massive anti-Hindi agitation by students against the centre on the issue of imposition of Hindi as the official language. This was the first time any non-Congress party had secured a majority of its own in any State. In the other eight States, coalition governments consisting of different non-Congress parties were formed. A popular saying was that one could take a train from Delhi to Howrah and not pass through a single Congress ruled State. It was a strange feeling for those who were used to seeing the Congress in power. So, was the domination of the Congress over?

Coalitions

The elections of 1967 brought into picture the phenomenon of coalitions. Since no single party had got majority, various non-Congress parties came together to form joint legislative parties (called Samyukt Vidhayak Dal in Hindi) that supported non-Congress governments. That is why these governments came to be described as NVD governments. In most of these cases the coalition partners were ideologically incompatible. The SVD government in Bihar, for instance, included the two socialist parties – SSP and the PSP – along with the CPI on the left and Jana Sangh on the right. In Punjab it was called the 'Punjabi United Front' and comprised the two rival Akali parties at that time – Sant group and the Masander group – with both the communist parties – the CPI and the CPIM, the SSP, the Republican Party and the Bhumiya Jana Sangh.

A cartoonist's rendering of Charan Singh's attempt to build a United Front of non-communist parties in 1974.

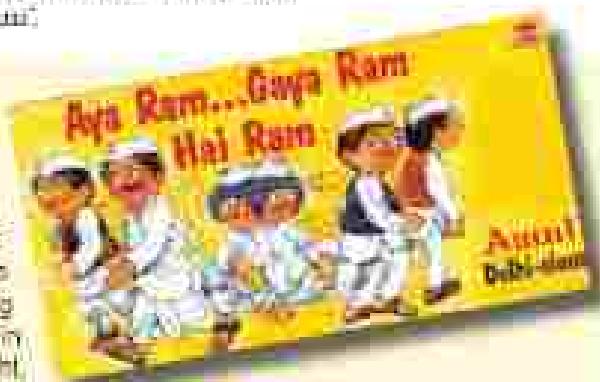

Defection

Another important feature of the politics after the 1967 election was the role played by defections in the making and unmaking of governments in the States. Defection means an elected representative leaves the party on whose symbol he/she was elected and joins another party. After the 1967 general election, the breakaway Congress legislators played an important role in installing non-Congress governments in three States - Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh. The constant realignments and shifting political loyalties in this period gave rise to the expression 'Aye Ram, Gaya Ram'.

The story of 'Aye Ram, Gaya Ram'

The expression 'aye ram, gaya ram' became popular in the political vocabulary in India to describe the practice of frequent floor-crossing by legislators. Literally translated, the terms meant Ram came and Ram went. The expression originated in an amazing feat of floor crossing achieved by Gaya Lal, an MLA in Haryana, in 1967. He changed his party twice in a fortnight from Congress to United Front, back to Congress, and then within nine hours to United Front again. It is said that when Gaya Lal declared his intention to quit the United Front and join the Congress, the Congress leader, Rao Birendra Singh brought him to Chandigarh press and declared "Gaya Ram goes now Aye Ram".

Gaya Lal's feat was immortalised in the phrase 'Aye Ram, Gaya Ram' which became the subject of numerous jokes and cartoons. Later, the Constitution was amended to prevent defections.

split in the Congress

We saw that after the 1967 elections, the Congress retained power at the Centre but with a reduced majority and lost power in many States. More importantly, the results proved that the Congress could be defeated at the elections, that there was no substitute as yet. Most non-Congress coalition governments in the States did not survive for long. They lost majority, and either new constitutions were forced or President's rule had to be imposed.

Indira vs. the 'Syndicate'

The next challenge to Indira Gandhi came not from the opposition but from within her own

K. R. N. Iyer

(1911-1974) Freedom fighter and Congress President. Chief Minister of Madras (Tamil Nadu). Party suffered electoral setback made efforts to spread education in Madras.

25

Province introduced money bill scheme for schools. In 1960 he proposed that a senior Congressman should resign from office to make way for younger party workers. His proposal is famous as the 'Nehru plan'.

The Congress in 1966

Syndicate was the informal name given to a group of Congress leaders who were in control of the party's organisation. It was led by K. Kamaraj, former Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu and then the president of the Congress party. It included powerful Congress leaders like S. P. Patil of Bombay, Jayaprakash Narayan as Member of Parliament of Bihar, the Lieutenant Governor of Andhra Pradesh, and Achyuta Ghosh of West Bengal. Both Lal Bahadur Shastri and Indira Gandhi used their position to the support received from the Syndicate. This group had a decisive say in Indira Gandhi's first Council of Ministers and also in policy formulation and implementation. After the Congress split the leaders of the Syndicate and those being sympathetic to them stayed with the Congress (U). Since 1966 Indira Gandhi's Congress (R) lost the test of popularity; all these big and powerful leaders of her party lost their power and prestige in 1971.

Ques. There is nothing new about state-level leaders being the king-makers in the centre. I thought it happened only in the 1990s.

party. She had to deal with the 'syndicate', a group of powerful and influential leaders from within the Congress. The Syndicate had played a role in the installation of Indira Gandhi as the Prime Minister by ensuring her election as the leader of the parliamentary party. These leaders expected Indira Gandhi to follow their advice. Gradually, however, Indira Gandhi attempted to assert her position within the government and the party. She chose her trusted group of advisers from outside the party. Slowly and carefully, she sidelined the Syndicate.

Indira Gandhi thus faced two challenges. She needed to build her independence from the Syndicate. She also needed to work towards repairing the ground that the Congress had lost in the 1967 elections. Indira Gandhi adopted a very bold strategy. She converted a simple power struggle into an ideological struggle. She launched a series of initiatives to give the government policy a Left orientation. She got the Congress Working Committee to adopt a Ten Point Programme in May 1967. This programme included social control of banks, nationalisation of Central Electricity, ceiling on urban property and income,

K. Kamaraj
11th & 13th Chairman of State between December 1970 and June 1971 and again between June 1977 and April 1979. Freedom Fighter and popular leader active in labour and peasant movements. A stalwart follower of Jawaharlal Nehru.

criticised in the movement led by J. V. Acharya for his decision to introduce reservations for the backward classes in Bihar during his second Chief Ministership, among others of the use of English language.

Indira Gandhi
Member of Parliament
from Rae Bareli
in Constituent Assembly, Member of Lok Sabha from Sone Sacha Constituency, Minister of Irrigation and Water Resources, Minister of National Marketing Board, Minister of Home Affairs and Home Minister, President of Congress during 1966-71.

public distribution of food grains, land reform and provision of house sites to the rural poor. While the 'syndicate' leaders formally approved this Left-wing programme, they had serious reservations about the same.

Presidential election, 1969

The factional rivalry between the Syndicate and Indira Gandhi came in the open in 1969. Following President Zaki Hussain's death, the post of President of the India fell vacant that year. Despite Mrs Gandhi's reservations the 'syndicate' managed to nominate her long-time opponent and then speaker of the Lok Sabha, N. Sanjivji Mehta, as the official Congress candidate for the ensuing Presidential elections. Indira Gandhi retaliated by encouraging the then Vice-President, V.V. Giri, to file his nomination as an independent candidate. She also announced several big and popular policy measures like the nationalisation of fourteen leading private banks and the abolition of the 'privy purse' or the special privileges given to former princes. Morarji Desai was the Deputy Prime Minister and Finance Minister.

V.V. Giri
(1914-1981)
President of India from 1969 to 1974.
Congress worker and labour leader from Andhra Pradesh. Indian
High Commissioner to Ceylon.
Minister of Labour, Minister of Union Home, Governor of U.P., Kerala, Mysore (Mysore),
Vice-President (1967-1969) and acting President after the death of President Zaki Hussain. Declined and contested presidential election as independent candidate; received support from Prime Minister for re-election as President.

Credit: R. R. Lalwanik in The Times of India

'The Left Hook' was published after the victory of V.V. Giri, the 'hook with the garland' over the nominee of the syndicate, represented here by Nijalingappa (in his funeral).

“ victory – a symbolic instance of the tragedy that overtook democracy when a leader who has risen to power on the crest of a popular wave or with the support of a democratic organisation becomes a victim of political narcissism and is engulfed by a culture of unscrupulous opposition.

S Nijalingappa:
Letter to Indira Gandhi expelling her from the party. 11 November
1969

On both the above issues serious differences emerged between him and the Prime Minister resulting in Desai leaving the government.

Congress had seen differences of this kind in the past, but this time both the parties wanted a showdown which took place during the Presidential elections. The then Congress President S. Nijalingappa issued a 'whip' asking all the Congress MPs and MLAs to vote in favour of Sanjeeva Reddy, the official candidate of the party. Supporters of Indira Gandhi requisitioned a special meeting of the ABCC (that is why this faction came to be known as 'requisitionists') that this was refused. After fiercely supporting V.V. Giri, the Prime Minister openly called for a 'conscience vote' which meant that the MPs and MLAs from the Congress should be free to vote the way they want. The election ultimately resulted in the victory of V.V. Giri, the independent candidate, and the defeat of Sanjeeva Reddy, the official Congress candidate.

The defeat of the official Congress candidate formalised the split in the party. The Congress President expelled the Prime Minister from the party; she claimed that her group was the real Congress. By November 1969, the Congress group led by the 'syndicate' came to be referred to as the Congress (Organization) and the group led by Indira Gandhi came to be called the Congress (Requisitionists). These two parties were also described as Old Congress and New Congress. Indira Gandhi projected the split as an ideological divide between socialists and conservatives, between the pro-poor and the pro-rich.

Abolition of privy purse

In Chapter One you have read about the integration of the Princely States. This integration was preceded by an assurance that after the dissolution of princely rule, the then rulers' families would be allowed to retain certain ancestral property, and given a grant in heredity or government allowances, measured on the basis of the extent, revenue and potential of the merging state. This grant was called the privy purse. At the time of accession, there was little erosion of these privileges since integration and consolidation was the primary aim.

Yet, hereditary privileges were not consonant with the principles of equality and social and economic justice laid down in the Constitution of India. Nehru had expressed his dissatisfaction over the matter time and again. Following the 1967 elections, Indira Gandhi supported the demand that the government should abolish privy purses. Moraji Desai, however, called it more morally wrong and amounting to a 'breach of faith with the privies'.

The government tried to bring a Constitutional amendment in 1970, but it was not passed in Rajya Sabha. It then issued an ordinance which was struck down by the Supreme Court. Indira Gandhi made this into a major electoral issue in 1971 and got a lot of public support. Following its massive victory in the 1971 election, the Constitution was amended to remove legal obstacles for abolition of 'privy purse'.

A cartoonist's impression of the implication of Indira Gandhi's meeting with the Syndicate.

The 1971 Election and Restoration of Congress

The split in the Congress reduced Indira Gandhi Government to a minority. Yet her government continued in office with the issue-based support of a few other parties including the Communist Party of India and the DMNL. During this period the government made conscious attempts to project its socialist credentials. This was also a phase when Indira Gandhi vigorously campaigned for implementing the existing land reform laws and undertook further land ceiling legislation. In order to end her dependence on other political parties, strengthen her party's position in the Parliament, and seek a popular mandate for her programmes, Indira Gandhi's government recommended the dissolution of the Lok Sabha in December 1970. This was another surprising and bold move. The fifth general election to Lok Sabha were held in February 1971.

The contest

The electoral contest appeared to be lopsided against Congress(I). After all, the new Congress was just one faction of an already weak party. Everyone believed that the real organisational strength of the Congress party was under the command of Congress(O). To make matters worse for Indira Gandhi, all the major non-communist, non-Congress opposition parties formed an electoral alliance known as the Grand Alliance. The PSP, PWD, Bharatiya Jana Sangh, Swatantra Party and the Bharatiya Kranti Dal came together under this umbrella. The ruling party had an alliance with the CPI.

Yet, the new Congress had something that its big opponents lacked – it had an issue, an agenda and a positive slogan. The Grand Alliance did not have a coherent political programme. Indira Gandhi said that the opposition alliance had only one common programme: Indira Hatao (Remove Indira). In contrast to this, she put forward a positive programme captured in the famous slogan: Garibi Hatao (Remove Poverty). She focused on the growth of the public sector, imposition of ceiling on rural land holdings and urban property, removal of disparities in income and opportunity, and abolition of princely privileges. Through quikr jatra Indira Gandhi tried to generate a support base among the disadvantaged, especially among the landless labourers, Dalits and Adivasis, minorities, women and the unemployed youth. The slogan of garibi hatao and the programmes that followed it were part of Indira Gandhi's political strategy of building an independent nationwide political support base.

The outcome and after

The results of the Lok Sabha elections of 1971, were as dramatic as was the decision to hold these elections. The Congress(I-CPI) alliance won more seats and votes than the Congress had ever won in the first four general elections. The coalition won 375 seats in Lok Sabha and secured 48.4 per cent votes. Indira Gandhi's Congress(I) won 252 seats with about 44 per cent of the popular votes on its own. Contrast this with the performance of the Congress(O): the party with so many stalwarts could get less than one-fourth of the votes secured by Indira Gandhi's party and win merely 15 seats. With this the Congress party led by Indira Gandhi established its claim to being the 'real' Congress and restored to it the dominant position in Indian politics. The Grand Alliance of the opposition proved a grand failure. Their combined tally of seats was less than 40.

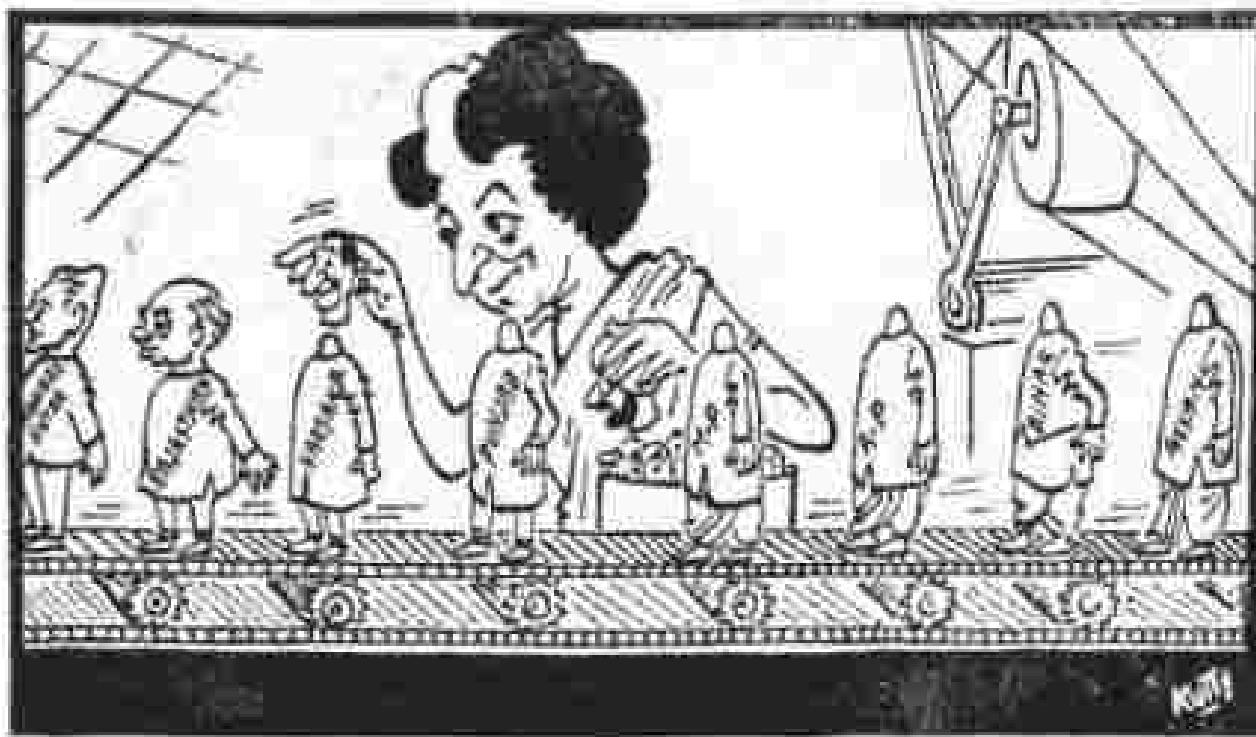

"The Grand Finish" is how a cartoonist interpreted the outcome of the 1971 elections.
They are on the ground are the then leading opposition figures.

Credit: R. N. Venkatesan, The Times of India

Soon after the 1971 Lok Sabha elections, a major political and military crisis broke out in East Pakistan (now Bangladesh). As you have read in Chapter Four, the 1971 elections were followed by the crisis in East Pakistan and the Indo-Pak war leading to the establishment of Bangladesh. These events added to the popularity of Indira Gandhi. Even the opposition leaders admitted her statesmanship. Her party swept through all the State Assembly elections held in 1972. She was seen not only as the protectress of the poor and the underprivileged, but also a strong nationalist leader. The opposition to her, either within the party or outside of it, simply did not matter.

With two successive election victories, one at the centre and other at the State level, the dominance of the Congress was restored. The Congress was now in power in almost all the States. It was also popular across different social sections. Within a span of four years, Indira Gandhi had ward off the challenge to her leadership and to the dominant position of the Congress party.

The new manner of choosing CMs by Indira Gandhi is apparent this cartoon.

Restoration?

that does it mean that the Congress system was restored? What Indira Gandhi had done was not a revival of the old Congress party. In many ways she had re-invented the party. The party occupied a similar position in terms of its popularity as in the past. But it was a different kind of a party. It relied entirely on the popularity of the supreme leader. It had a somewhat weak organisational structure. This Congress party now did not have many factions, thus it could not accommodate all kinds of opinions and interests. While it won elections, it depended more on some social groups: the poor, the women, Dalits, Adivasis and the tribals. This was a new Congress that had emerged. Thus Indira Gandhi restored the Congress system by changing the nature of the Congress system itself.

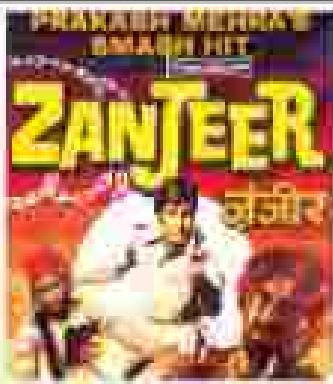

Despite being more popular, the new Congress did not have the kind of capacity to absorb all tensions and conflicts that the Congress system was known for. While the Congress consolidated its position and Indira Gandhi assumed a position of unprecedented political authority, the spaces for democratic expression of people's aspirations actually shrunk. The popular unrest and mobilisation around issues of development and economic deprivation continued to grow. In the next chapter you will read about how this led to a political crisis that threatened the very existence of constitutional democracy in the country.

What is the difference between the old and new Congress?

Entertainment

ZANTEER

Vijay, a young police officer is assigned to take charge and try to get back Arunachal government officials back off. Vijay is determined to take revenge. He fights all odds and manipulates the officials. Even after he is arrested in taking revenge, Vijay is fighting the arduous fight and goes through several changes from within the system.

The film conveys the concept of social justice and the way humans along with their own fate formality. It highlights the importance of the system and the social and ethical aspects of society through the eyes of Vijay. The film is the first of its kind ever to be based on the Valley going mad of the 1970s.

Year: 1972
Genre: Political Movie
Director: David Alwyn
Cast: Amrita Singh, Ashok, Jay, John Dutt, Priti

EXERCISES

- 1. Which of these statements about the 1997 elections is/are correct?
- Congress won the Lok Sabha elections but lost the Assembly elections in many states
 - Congress lost both Lok Sabha and Assembly elections
 - Congress had majority in the Lok Sabha but formed a coalition government with the support of some other parties
 - Congress retained power at the Centre with an increased majority
- 2. Match the following:
- | | |
|----------------------|--|
| (a) Syndicate | i. An elected representative leaving the party to form his/her own party |
| (b) Coalition | ii. A party that attracts public attention |
| (c) Slogans | iii. Parties with different ideological position coming together to oppose Congress and its policies |
| (d) Anti-Congressism | iv. A group of powerful and influential leaders within the Congress |
- 3. Who would you identify with the following slogans/phrases?
- Jai Jaiwant, Jai Akash
 - India Has to Change
 - Gather Round
- 4. Which of the following statements about the Grand Alliance of 1971 is correct?
- The Grand Alliance
- was formed by non-Congress, non-Secular parties
 - had a clear political and ideological programme
 - was formed by all non-Congress parties
- 5. How should a political party resolve its internal differences? Here are some suggestions. Think of each and list out their advantages and shortcomings.
- Follow the dictates of the party president
 - Listen to the majority group
 - Score below the ground every issue
 - Consult the senior and experienced leaders of the party
- 6. State which of these were reasons for the defeat of the Congress in 1989. Give reasons for your answer.
- The absence of a charismatic leader in the Congress party
 - Splits within the Congress party
 - Increase in mobilisation of regional, ethnic and communal groups

- (a) increasing working-class Congress parties
 (b) internal differences within the Congress party
7. What were the factors which led to the popularity of Indira Gandhi's Government in the early 1970s?
8. What does the term 'syndicate' mean in the context of the Congress party of the 1970s? What role did the Syndicate play in the Congress party?
9. Discuss the major issues which led to the formal split of the Congress Party in 1969.

10. Read the passage and answer the questions below:

Indira Gandhi changed the Congress into highly centralised and undemocratic party organisation, from the earlier federal, democratic and ideological formation that Nehru had led. But this could not have happened had not Indira Gandhi changed the entire nature of politics. Her new populist politics turned political ideology into a mere electoral discourse, use of various slogans not meant to be translated into government policies, winning big electoral victories in early 1970s, amidst the celebration, the Congress party as a political organisation died. — Suartha Kumar

- (a) What according to the author is the difference between the strategies of Nehru and Indira Gandhi?
 (b) Why does the author say that the Congress party died in the seventies?
 (c) In what way did the change in the Congress party affect other political parties also?

THINK & DISCUSS

- Make a list of slogans coined by political parties.
- Do you see any similarities between advertisements and manifestos, slogans and advertisements of political parties?
- Have a discussion on how price affects the political fortunes of the political parties.

The editorial page of 'The Statesman' of 27 June 1975 was the very only day, except that the space for editorial was left blank. The editorial was "censored" using emergency powers. Many other newspapers also censored such blank spaces in protest against emergency. Later, having blank spaces was also banned.

In this chapter...

We have seen in the last chapter that the Congress recovered after 1971, but was not the same kind of party. The difference became clear in a series of events between 1973 and 1975 that brought new challenges to India's democratic politics and the institutional balance sought by the Constitution. These developments led to the imposition of emergency in June 1975. Normally, we would associate 'emergency' with war and aggression or with natural disaster. But this 'emergency' was imposed because of the perceived threat of internal disturbance. The Emergency ended as dramatically as it had begun, resulting in a defeat of the Congress in the Lok Sabha elections of 1977.

In this chapter we focus on this crucial phase in the history of democracy in India and ask some questions that have remained controversial after all these years:

- Why was Emergency imposed? Was it necessary?
- What did the imposition of Emergency mean in practice?
- What were the consequences of Emergency on party politics?
- What are the lessons of Emergency for Indian democracy?

THE CRISIS OF DEMOCRATIC ORDER

Background to Emergency

We have already studied the changes that were taking place in Indian politics since 1967. Indira Gandhi had emerged as a towering leader with tremendous popularity. This was also the period when party competition became bitter and polarised. This period also witnessed tensions in the relationship between the government and the judiciary. The Supreme Court found many initiatives of the government to be violative of the Constitution. The Congress party took the position that this stand of the Court was against principles of democracy and parliamentary supremacy. The Congress also alleged that the Court was a conservative institution and it was becoming an obstacle in the way of implementing pro-poor welfare programmes. The parties opposed to the Congress felt that politics was becoming too personalised and that governmental authority was being converted into personal authority. The split in the Congress had sharpened the division between Indira Gandhi and her opponents.

Economic context

In the elections of 1971, Congress had given the slogan of garibi hatao (remove poverty). However, the social and economic condition in the country did not improve much after 1971-72. The Bangladesh crisis had put a heavy strain on India's economy. About eight million people crossed over the East Pakistan border into India. This was followed by war with Pakistan. After the war the US government stopped all aid to India. In the international market, oil prices increased manifold during this period. This led to a sharp inflation in prices of commodities. Prices increased by 23 per cent in 1973 and 30 per cent in 1974. Such a high level of inflation caused much hardship in the people.

Industrial growth was low and unemployment was very high, particularly in the rural areas. In order to reduce expenditure the government froze the salaries of its employees. This caused further dissatisfaction among governmental employees. Monsoons failed in 1972-1973. This resulted in a sharp decline in agricultural productivity. Food grain output declined by 8 per cent. There was a general atmosphere of dissatisfaction with the prevailing economic times

Hard days ahead

Chapter 6

The best we can hope for is that 1973 will be hatsoed quickly

“...a people cannot at once be free, their leader cannot be (and Total Revolution as our motto, the future belongs to us.
”

A slogan of the Bihar movement, 1974.

situation all over the country. In such a divided non-Congress opposition parties were able to organise popular protests effectively. Instances of students' unions that had persisted from the late 1960s became more pronounced in this period. There was also an increase in the activities of Marxist groups who did not believe in parliamentary politics. These groups had taken to arms and insurgent techniques for the overthrow of the capitalist order and the established political system. Known as the Marxist-Leninist New Marxist groups or Naxalites, they were particularly strong in West Bengal, where the state government took stringent measures to suppress them.

Gujarat and Bihar movements:

Students' protests in Gujarat and Bihar, both of which were Congress ruled States, had far-reaching impact on the politics of the two States and national politics. In January 1974 students in Gujarat started an agitation against rising prices of food grains, cooking oil and other essential commodities, and against corruption in high places. The students' protest was joined by major opposition parties and became widespread leading to the imposition of President's rule in the state. The opposition parties demanded fresh elections to the state legislature. Moraji Desai, a prominent leader of Congress (I), who was the main rival of Indira Gandhi when he was in the Congress, announced that he would go on an indefinite fast if fresh elections were not held in the State. Under intense pressure from students, supported by the opposition political parties, assembly elections were held in Gujarat in June 1975. The Congress was defeated in this election.

In March 1974 students came together in Bihar to protest against rising prices, food scarcity, unemployment and corruption. After a point they invited Jayaprakash Narayan (JPN), who had given up active politics and was involved in social work, to lead the student movement. He accepted it on the condition that the movement will remain non-violent and will not limit itself to Bihar. Thus the students' movement assumed a political character and had national appeal. People from all walks of life now entered the movement. Jayaprakash Narayan demanded the dismissal of the Congress government in Bihar and gave a call for total revolution in the social, economic and political spheres in order to establish what he considered to be true democracy. A series of bandhs, gheras, and strikes were organised in protest against the Bihar government. The government, however, refused to resign.

“...a people's rule,
India is India.
”

A slogan given by Dr. K. Sankara, President of the Congress, 1974.

The Naxalite Movement

In 1967 a peasant uprising took place in the Barrabandi police station area of Darjeeling hills district in West Bengal under the leadership of the local cadres of the Communist Party of India (Marxist). Beginning from the Barrabandi police station, the peasant movement spread to several states of India and came to be referred broadly as the Naxalite movement. In 1969, they broke off from the CPI (M) and a new party, Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist) (CPI-ML), was formed under the leadership of Chandra Shekhar Azad. It argued that democracy in India was a sham and tended to adopt a strategy of protracted guerrilla warfare in order to lead to a revolution.

The Naxalite movement has used force to snatch land from the rich landowners and give it to the poor and the landless. Its supporters advocated the use of violent means to achieve their political goals. In spite of the use of preventive detention and other strong measures adopted by the West Bengal government by the Congress party, the Naxalite movement did not come to an end. In later years, it spread to many other parts of the country. The Naxalite movement has by now split into various parties and organisations. Some of these parties like the CPI-ML (Liberation) participate in open democratic politics.

Currently about 75 districts in nine States are affected by Naxalite violence. Most of these are very backward areas inhabited by Adivasis. In these areas the state-keepers, landlords and small cultivators are denied their basic rights with regard to security of tenure of their lands in produce, payment of fair wages etc. Forced labor, expropriation of resources by outsiders and exploitation by entrepreneurs are also common in these areas. These conditions lead to the growth of the Naxalite movement.

Governments have taken stern measures in dealing with the Naxalite movement. Human rights activists have criticised the government for violating constitutional norms in dealing with the Naxalites. Many thousand people have lost their lives in the violence by the Naxalites and the anti-Naxalite violence by the government.

Chandra Shekhar Azad (1918-1971) Communist revolutionary and the leader of the Barrabandi uprising participated in the Telangana movement before independence left the CPI and founded the Communist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist). He believed in the Marxist path of peasant revolution and defended revolutionary violence died in police custody.

Hazaar Chaurasi ki Maa

With the Naxalites. Many thousand people have lost their lives in the violence by the Naxalites and the anti-Naxalite violence by the government.

Cartoon: R. Lakhan in the Times of India

JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN
Born: 1902
Died: 1979
A mass leader, youth leader and secretary of the Congress (Socialist)

Party and the Socialist Party, a hero of the 1942 Quit India movement, decided to join Nehru's cabinet after 1966 but soon parted because of a分歧 and was involved in the Shodak movement negotiations with the Naga rebels. After his release in 1974 and emerged as commander of forces in Charkhi, leader of Bihar movement, he became the symbol of opposition to Emergency and became driving force behind the formation of Janata Party.

The movement was beginning to influence national politics. Jayaprakash Narayan wanted to spread the Bihar movement to other parts of the country. Alongside the agitation led by Jayaprakash Narayan, the employees of the Railways gave a call for a nationwide strike. This threatened to paralyse the country. In 1975, JP led a peoples' march to the Parliament. This was one of the largest political rallies ever held in the capital. He was now supported by the non-Congress opposition parties like the Bharatiya Janata Sangh, the Congress (R), the Bharatiya Lok Dal, the Socialist Party and others. These parties were projecting JP as an alternative to Indira Gandhi. However, there were many criticisms about his ideas and about the politics of mass agitations that he was employing. Both the Gujarat and Bihar agitations were seen as anti-Congress and rather than opposing the State governments, they were seen as protests against the leadership of Indira Gandhi. She believed that the movement was motivated by personal aggrandisement to her.

Railway Strike 1974

What would happen when the railways stop running? Not for one or two days, but for more than a week? Of course, many people would be inconvenienced, but more than that, the economy of the country would come to a halt because goods are transported from one part to another by trains.

Do you know that such a thing actually happened in 1974? The National Coordinative Committee for Railways' Struggle led by George Fernandes gave a call for nationwide strike by all employees of the Railways for pressing their demands related to bonus and service conditions. The government was opposed to these demands. So, the employees of India's largest public sector undertaking went on a strike in May 1974. The strike by the Railway employees added to the atmosphere of labour unrest. It also raised issues like rights of the workers and whether employees of essential services should adopt measures like strikes.

The government declared the strike illegal. As the government refused to concede the demands of the striking workers, arrested many of their leaders and destroyed the territorial army to protect railway tracks, the strike had to be called off after twenty days without any settlement.

Conflict with Judiciary

This was also the period when the government and the ruling party had many differences with the judiciary. Do you remember the discussion about the long drawn conflict between the Parliament and the judiciary? You have studied this last year. Three constitutional issues had emerged: can the Parliament abridge Fundamental Rights? The Supreme Court said it cannot. Secondly, can the Parliament curtail the right to property by making an amendment? Again, the Court said that Parliament cannot abridge the Constitution in such a manner that rights are curtailed. Thirdly, the Parliament amended the Constitution saying that it can abridge Fundamental Rights for giving effect to Directive Principles. But the Supreme Court rejected this provision also. This led to a crisis as far as the relations between the government and the judiciary were concerned. You may remember that this crisis culminated in the famous Ramdasji Bhushan Case. In this case, the Court gave a decision that there are some basic features of the Constitution and the Parliament cannot amend these features.

Two developments further added to the tension between the judiciary and the executive. Immediately after the Supreme Court's decision) in 1973 in the Kesavaiah (Mysore) case, a vacancy arose for the post of the Chief Justice of India. It had been a practice to appoint the senior-most judge of the Supreme Court as the Chief Justice. But in 1973, the government set aside the seniority of three judges and appointed Justice A. N. Ray as the Chief Justice of India. The appointment became politically controversial because all the three judges who were superseded had given rulings against the stand of the government. Thus, constitutional interpretations and political infighting were getting mixed up rapidly. People close to the Prime Minister started talking of the need for a judiciary and the bureaucracy 'committed' to the vision of the executive and the legislature. The climax of the confirmation was of course the ruling of the High Court declaring Indira Gandhi's election invalid.

Declaration of Emergency

On 12 June 1975, Justice Jagannath Lal Srivastava of the Allahabad High Court passed a judgment declaring Indira Gandhi's election to the Lok Sabha invalid. This order came on an election petition filed by Raj Narayan, a socialist leader and a candidate who had contested against her in 1971. The petition challenged the election of Indira Gandhi on the ground that she had used the services of government servants in her election campaign. The judgment of the High Court meant that legally she was no more an MP and therefore, could not remain the Prime Minister unless she was once again elected as an MP within six months. On June 24, the Supreme Court granted her a partial stay on the High Court order – till her appeal was decided, she could remain as MP but could not take part in the proceedings of the Lok Sabha.

Crisis and response

This is like article the army to destroy the government is that democratic?

The stage was now set for a big political confrontation. The opposition political parties, led by Jayaprakash Narayan, pressed for Indira Gandhi's resignation and organised a massive demonstration in Delhi's Hazratganj grounds on 25 June 1975. Jayaprakash announced a nationwide satyagraha for her resignation and asked the army, the police and government employees not to obey "illegal and immoral orders". This too threatened to bring the activities of the government to a standstill. The political mood of the country had turned against the Congress, more than ever before.

The response of the government was to declare a state of emergency. On 25 June 1975, the government declared that there was a threat of internal disturbances and therefore, it invoked Article 352 of the Constitution. Under the provision of this article the government could declare a state of emergency on grounds of external threat or a threat of internal disturbances. The government claimed that a grave crisis had arisen which made the proclamation of a state of emergency necessary. Technically speaking this was within the powers of the government), for our Constitution provides for some special powers to the government once an emergency is declared.

Credit: R. H. Bessin in the Primer of India

This cartoon appeared few days before the declaration of Emergency and captures the sense of impending political crisis. The man behind the chut is D. K. (through the Congress President).

Once an emergency is proclaimed, the federal distribution of powers becomes practically suspended and all the powers are concentrated in the hands of the union government. Secondly, the government also gets the power to curtail or restrict all or any of the Fundamental Rights during the emergency. From the wording of the provisions of the Constitution, it is clear that an Emergency is seen as an extraordinary condition in which normal democratic politics cannot function. Therefore, special powers are granted to the government.

On the night of 25 June 1975, the Prime Minister communicated the imposition of Emergency to President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed. He issued the proclamation immediately. After midnight, the electricity to all the major newspaper offices was disconnected. In the early morning, a large number of leaders and workers of the opposition parties were arrested. The Cabinet was informed about it at a special meeting at 6 a.m. on 26 June, after all this had taken place.

नव्वी कुलिया

अखबारों पर
बंदिश लगी, हटी

कैसे बंदिश लगी? कैसे हटी?

देश में लालशाही रोकने के
लिए संघर्ष हेतु तैयार रहे

लालशाही को पढ़ा

THE TIMES OF INDIA

STATE OF EMERGENCY DECLARED

Several leaders arrested

C.N. was in Security in peril, says P.M.

Rights suspended

नया आपात्काल : जयप्रकाश और कई नेता गिरफतार

To our readers

The City editions of Friday and Saturday of the Hindustan Times could not be brought out as no power was available from 12.45 P.M. on Thursday till 7.15 P.M. on Friday. The inconvenience is deeply regretted.

Emergency ensures
YOUR Security—and the NATION'S

WORK MORE TALK LESS

प्रधान मंत्री का
प्रतिक्रिया घासका
अमर से लकड़ी का

THE HINDUSTAN TIMES

MRS GANDHI DEFEATED

Cong rout in Delhi total

Janta Party jorges ahead in North Bansi Lal Sanjay out

The night the didn't sleep

we're Cocomelon
Sustivation

Consequences

This brought the agitation to an abrupt stop; strikes were banned; many opposition leaders were put in jail; the political situation became very quiet though tense. Deciding to use its special powers under Emergency provisions, the government suspended the freedom of the Press. Newspapers were asked to get prior approval for all material to be published. This is known as press censorship. Apprehending social and communal disharmony, the government banned Shashiela, Savayamsevak Sangh (SSS) and Jamiat-e-Islami. Protests and strikes and public agitations were also disallowed. Most importantly, under the provisions of Emergency, the various Fundamental Rights of citizens stood suspended, including the right of citizens to move the Court for restoring their Fundamental Rights.

The government made extensive use of preventive detention. Under this provision, people are arrested and detained not because they have committed any offence, but on the apprehension that they may commit an offence. Using preventive detention acts, the government made large scale arrests during the Emergency. Arrested political workers could not challenge their arrest through habeas corpus petitions. Many cases were filed in the High Courts and the Supreme Court by and on behalf of arrested persons, but the government claimed that it was not even necessary to inform the arrested persons of the reasons and grounds of their arrest. Several High Courts gave judgments that even after the declaration of Emergency the courts could entertain a writ of habeas corpus filed by a person challenging his/her detention. In April 1976, the constitution bench of the Supreme Court overruled the High Courts and accepted the government's plea. It meant that during Emergency the government could take away the citizen's right to life and liberty. This judgment closed the doors of judiciary for the citizens and is regarded as one of the most controversial judgments of the Supreme Court.

There were many acts of dissent and resistance to the Emergency. Many political workers who were not arrested in the first wave, went 'underground' and organised protests against the government. Newspapers like the Indian Express and the Statesman protested against censorship by leaving blank spaces where news items had been censored. Magazines like the Seminar and the Maitreya chose to close down rather than submit to censorship. Many journalists were arrested for writing against the Emergency. Many underground newsletters and leaflets were published to bypass censorship. Kannada writer Sharanya Karanth, awarded with Padma Bhushan, and Hindi writer Panchshwaranath Hemu, awarded with Padma Shri, returned their awards in protest against the suspension of democracy. By and large, though, such open acts of defiance and resistance were rare.

The Parliament also brought in many new changes to the Constitution. In the background of the ruling of the Allahabad High

How were the Supreme Courts given the power to decide what happened in Emergency? Read on...

Soon after Indira Gandhi came, an amendment was made declaring that elections of Prime Minister, President and Vice-President could not be challenged in the Court. The forty-second amendment was also passed during the Emergency. You have already studied that this amendment consisted of a series of changes in many parts of the Constitution. Among the various changes made by this amendment, one was that the duration of the legislatures in the country was extended from five to six years. This change was not only for the Emergency period, but was intended to be of a permanent nature. Besides this, during an Emergency, elections can be postponed by one year. Thus, effectively, after 1971, elections needed to be held only in 1976, instead of 1971.

Let us now talk about the law who proscribed. What about the role of the top officials, industrialists, social and religious leaders, etc., who were involved?

Controversies regarding Emergency

Emergency is one of the most controversial episodes in Indian politics. One reason is that there are differing viewpoints about the need to declare emergency. Another reason is that using the powers given by the Constitution, the government practically suspended the democratic functioning. As the investigations by the Shah Commission after the Emergency found out, there were many 'excesses' committed during the Emergency. Finally, there are varying assessments of what the lessons of Emergency are for the practice of democracy in India. Let us look at these one by one.

Was the Emergency necessary?

The Constitution simply mentioned 'internal disturbances' as the reason for declaring Emergency. Before 1975, Emergency was never proclaimed on this ground. We have noted that agitations were going on in many parts of the country. Was this reason enough for declaring Emergency? The government argued that in a democracy, the opposition parties must allow the elected ruling party to govern according to its policies. It felt that frequent recourse to agitations, protests and collective action are not good for democracy. Supporters of Indira Gandhi also held that in a democracy, you cannot continuously have extra-parliamentary politics targeting the government. This tends to instillify and distract the administration from its routine task of ensuring development. All energies are diverted to maintenance of law and order. Indira Gandhi wrote in a

Shah Commission's report

In May 1977, the Janata Party government appointed a Committee of Inquiry headed by Justice J. C. Shah, retired Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of India, to inquire into several aspects of allegations of abuse of authority, excesses and malpractices committed and action taken in the wake of the Emergency proclaimed on the 26th June 1975. The Commission submitted various kinds of evidence and called scores of witnesses to give testimonies. These included Indira Gandhi who appeared before the Commission but refused to answer any questions.

The Government of India accepted the findings, observations and recommendations contained in the interim reports and third and final report of the Shah Commission. The reports were also tabled in the two houses of Parliament.

“

In the name of democracy it has been sought to negate the very functioning of democracy. Only elected governments have not been allowed to function... agencies have unchallenged the assumption, leading to violent incidents. Certain persons have gone to the length of creating new armed forces to maintain and new policies to control. The forces of discrimination are in full play and communal persons are being assured, destroying our unity. ...we can see any Government worth the name stand by and allow the country's stability to be jeopardised? The actions of a few are endangering the rights of the vast majority.

”

Balasaheb Govindrao
Addressing the millions
All India Workers
26 June 1975

Credit: R. K. Laxman in The Times of India
Mrs. Gandhi's confrontation with the Shah Commission provided this cartoon when the commission's report was released.

letter to the Shah Commission that subversive forces were trying to obstruct the progressive programmes of the government and were attempting to dislodge her from power through extra-constitutional means.

Some other parties, like the CPI that continued to back the Congress during the Emergency, also believed that there was an international conspiracy against the unity of India. It believed that in such circumstances some restrictions on agitations were justified.

• Violations in Turi: an area study

Emergency witnessed large-scale displacement of people living in Delhi's poorer localities. The slum-dwellers were forcibly relocated in makeshift camps across the river Yamuna. One such affected area was the colonies in Tughlaq gate. The houses of the area were demolished. Hundreds of people of the area were forcibly displaced. However, many people escaped sterilisation simply because they were able to motivate other people to get themselves sterilised and well informed by the right of life to a piece of land. Thus, while some people became victims of government-sponsored sterilisation, some people managed to victimise others in their desire to legally secure a piece of land which would safeguard them from arbitrary displacement.

Source: Haji Commission of Inquiry, Interim Report

Are you satisfied or otherwise in the family or neighbourhood about their experience during 1975-77? Take down notes on the following:

- Their personal experience of the Emergency
- Any record of support or opposition to the Emergency in your locality
- Their experiences in the 1977 elections and why they voted the way they did.

Put your notes together and make a collective report on Emergency in your locality.

Let's Research

The CPI felt that the agitations led by JII were mainly by the middle classes who were opposed to the radical policies of the Congress party. After the Emergency, the CPI felt that its assessment was mistaken and that it was an error to have supported the Emergency.

On the other hand, the critics of the Emergency argued that ever since the freedom movement, Indian politics had a history of popular struggles. If many other opposition leaders felt that democracy, people had the right to publicly protest against the government. The Hindu and Christian agitations were mostly peaceful and non-violent. Those who were arrested were never tried for any anti-national activity. No cases were registered against most of the detainees. The Home Ministry, which is entrusted with the responsibility of monitoring the internal situation of the country, also did not express any concern about the law and order situation in the country. If some agitations had over-stepped their limits, the government had enough routine powers to deal with it. There was no need to implement democratic倒流 and use draconian measures like the Emergency for that. The threat was not to the unity and integrity of the country but to the ruling party and to the Prime Minister herself. The critics say that Indira Gandhi misused a constitutional provision meant for saving the country to save her personal power.

What happened during emergency?

The actual implementation of the Emergency is another contentious issue. Did the government misuse its Emergency powers? Were there excesses and abuse of authority? The government said that it wanted to use the Emergency to bring law and order, restore efficiency, and above all, implement the pro-poor welfare programmes. For this purpose, the government led by Indira Gandhi announced a twenty-point programme and declared its determination to implement this programme. The twenty-point programme included land reforms, land redistribution, review of agricultural wages, workers' participation in management, regularization of bonded labour, etc. In the initial months after the declaration of Emergency, the urban middle classes were generally happy over the fact that agitations came to an end and discipline was enforced on the government employees. The poor and rural people also expected effective implementation of the welfare programmes that the government was promising. Thus, different sections of society had different expectations from the emergency and also different viewpoints about it.

Credit: R. K. Lala, in The Times of India

Critics of Emergency point out that most of these promises by the government remained unfulfilled, that these were simply meant to divert attention from the excesses that were taking place. They question the use of preventive detention on such a large scale. We have noted that many prominent political leaders were arrested. In all, 678 opposition leaders were arrested. The Singh Commission estimated that nearly one lakh eleven thousand people were arrested under preventive detention laws. Severe restrictions were put on the press, sometimes without proper legal sanctity. The Singh Commission report mentions that the General Manager of the Delhi Power Supply Corporation received verbal orders from the office of the Lt. Governor of Delhi to cut electricity to all newspaper presses at 2.00 a.m. on 26 June, 1975. Electricity was restored two to three days later after the censorship apparatus had been set up.

Caste killing case

On 1 March 1975, P. Rajeev, a final year student of the Calicut Engineering College, Kerala, was whisked away from the hostel in the early hours along with another student Joseph Chel. Rajeev's father, T.V. Balakrishnan, made frantic efforts to trace his son. He met legislators, he petitioned the police and demanded he also sought the help of the then Home Minister, V.K. Krishna Menon. As the Emergency was proclaimed, cases relating to the citizen's liberty could not be tried in the courts. After the Emergency was lifted, Menon filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus in the Kerala High Court at Cannanore. From the evidence of witnesses, it became clear that P. Rajeev had been taken to the Town Bungalow in Calicut the next day where he was tortured by the police. At a subsequent hearing Kerala government told the High Court that P. Rajeev had died in police custody, as a result of continuous police torture. The Division Bench of Kerala High Court held that Krishna Menon had lied to the Court. V. K. Krishna Menon who had by then become Chief Minister of Kerala had to resign because of the strictures passed by the High Court.

(Source : Truth Commission of Inquiry, Interim report II)

There were other and more serious allegations regarding the exercise of governmental power by people who held no official position. Sanjay Gandhi, the Prime Minister's younger son, did not hold any official position at the time. Yet, he gained control over the administration and allegedly interfered in the functioning of the government. His role in the demolitions and forced sterilisation in Delhi became very controversial.

Apart from the arrests of political workers and the restrictions on the press, the Emergency directly affected lives of common people in many ways. Torture and custodial deaths occurred during the Emergency; arbitrary relocation of poor people also took place; and over-enthusiasm about population control led to cases of compulsory sterilisation. These instances show what happens when the normal democratic process is suspended.

Lessons of the Emergency

The Emergency at once brought out both the weaknesses and the strengths of India's democracy. Though there are many observers who think that India ceased to be democratic during the Emergency, it is noteworthy that normal democratic functioning resumed within a short span of time. Thus, one lesson of Emergency is that it is extremely difficult to do away with democracy in India.

Secondly, through new laws and amending the Constitution that have been ratified since. Now,

“... death of
P. Rajeev, caused by Krishna Menon
and his daughter Sanjay
and his son-in-law Justice
Jagdish Singh Khehar
”

An emergency declaration by the Government of India, soon after the declaration of Emergency, 1975.

“ Today is India's Independence Day... And it is the right to live in India's Democracy.
”

An Address given to The Press, London,
16 August 1975 by
P. V. Narasimha Rao

‘‘State of Emergency can be proclaimed only on the grounds of ‘armed rebellion’ and it is necessary that the advice to the President to proclaim Emergency must be given in writing by the Council of Ministers.

Thirdly, the Emergency made everyone more aware of the value of civil liberties. The Courts too, have taken an active role after the Emergency in protecting the civil liberties of the individuals. This is a response to the inability of the judiciary to protect civil liberties effectively during the emergency. Many civil liberties organisations came up after this experience.

However, the critical years of emergency brought many issues that have not been adequately grappled with. We have noted in this chapter that there is a tension between civilian functioning of a democratic government and the constituents political protests by parties and groups. What is the correct balance between the two? Should the citizens have full freedom to engage in protest activity or should they have no such right at all? What are the limits to such a protest?

Secondly, the actual implementation of the Emergency rule took place through the police and the administration. These institutions could not function independently. They were turned into political instruments of the ruling party and according to the Shah Commission Report, the administration and the police became vulnerable to political pressures. This problem did not vanish after the Emergency.

Politics after Emergency

The most valuable and lasting lesson of the Emergency was learnt as soon as the Emergency was over and the Lok Sabha elections were announced. The 1977 elections turned into a referendum on the experience of the Emergency, at least in north India where the impact of the Emergency was felt most strongly. The opposition fought the election on the slogan of ‘new democracy’. The peoples verdict was decisively against the Emergency. The lesson was clear and has been reiterated in many state level elections thereafter – governments that are perceived to be anti-democratic are severely punished by the voters. In this sense the experience of 1975–77 ended up strengthening the foundations of democracy in India.

Lok Sabha Elections, 1977

In January 1977, after eighteen months of Emergency, the government decided to hold elections. Accordingly, all the leaders and activists were released from jail. Elections were held in March 1977. This left the opposition with very little time, but political developments took place very rapidly. The major opposition parties had already been coming closer in the pre-Emergency period. Now they came together on the out of the elections and formed a new party, known as the Janata Party. The new party accepted the leadership of Jayaprakash Narayan. Some leaders of the Congress who were opposed to the Emergency also joined this new party. Some other Congress leaders also came out and formed a separate party under the leadership of Jagdish Ram. This party named as Congress for Democracy, later merged with the Janata Party.

The Janata Party made this election into a referendum on the Emergency. Its campaign was focused on the non-democratic character of the rule and on the various excesses that took place during this period. In the backdrop of arrests of thousands of persons and the censorship of the Press, the public opinion was against the Congress. Jayaprakash Narayan became the popular symbol of restoration of democracy. The formation of the Janata Party also ensured that anti-Congress votes would not be divided. It was evident that the going was tough for the Congress.

Yet the final results took everyone by surprise. For the first time since independence, the Congress party was defeated in the Lok Sabha elections. The Congress could win only 134 seats in the Lok Sabha. Its share of popular votes fell to less than 25 per cent. The Janata Party and

Morarji Desai
(1896-1982) Freedom fighter, a Gandhian 1977: Proponent of 'One Nation' policy and politician. Deemed Minister of Bombay State Deputy Prime Minister, 1974-
1977; joined Congress
(O) after its split in the early 1970s. Was Prime Minister from 1977 to 1979. Was Prime Minister belonging to a non-Congress party.

Credit: R. K. Laxman in the Statesman

A cartoonist's rendering of who won and what was indicated in the 1977 election. Those standing with the running man include Jagdish Ram, Morarji Desai, Chaudhary Charan Singh and Atal Behari Vajpeyi.

In offices won 1340 out of the 1472 seats in the Lok Sabha; Janata Party itself won 295 seats and thus enjoyed a clear majority. In north India, it was a massive electoral wave against the Congress. The Congress lost in every constituency in Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Delhi, Haryana and the Punjab and could win only one seat each in Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh. Indira Gandhi was defeated from Rae Bareli, as was her son Sanjay Gandhi from Amethi.

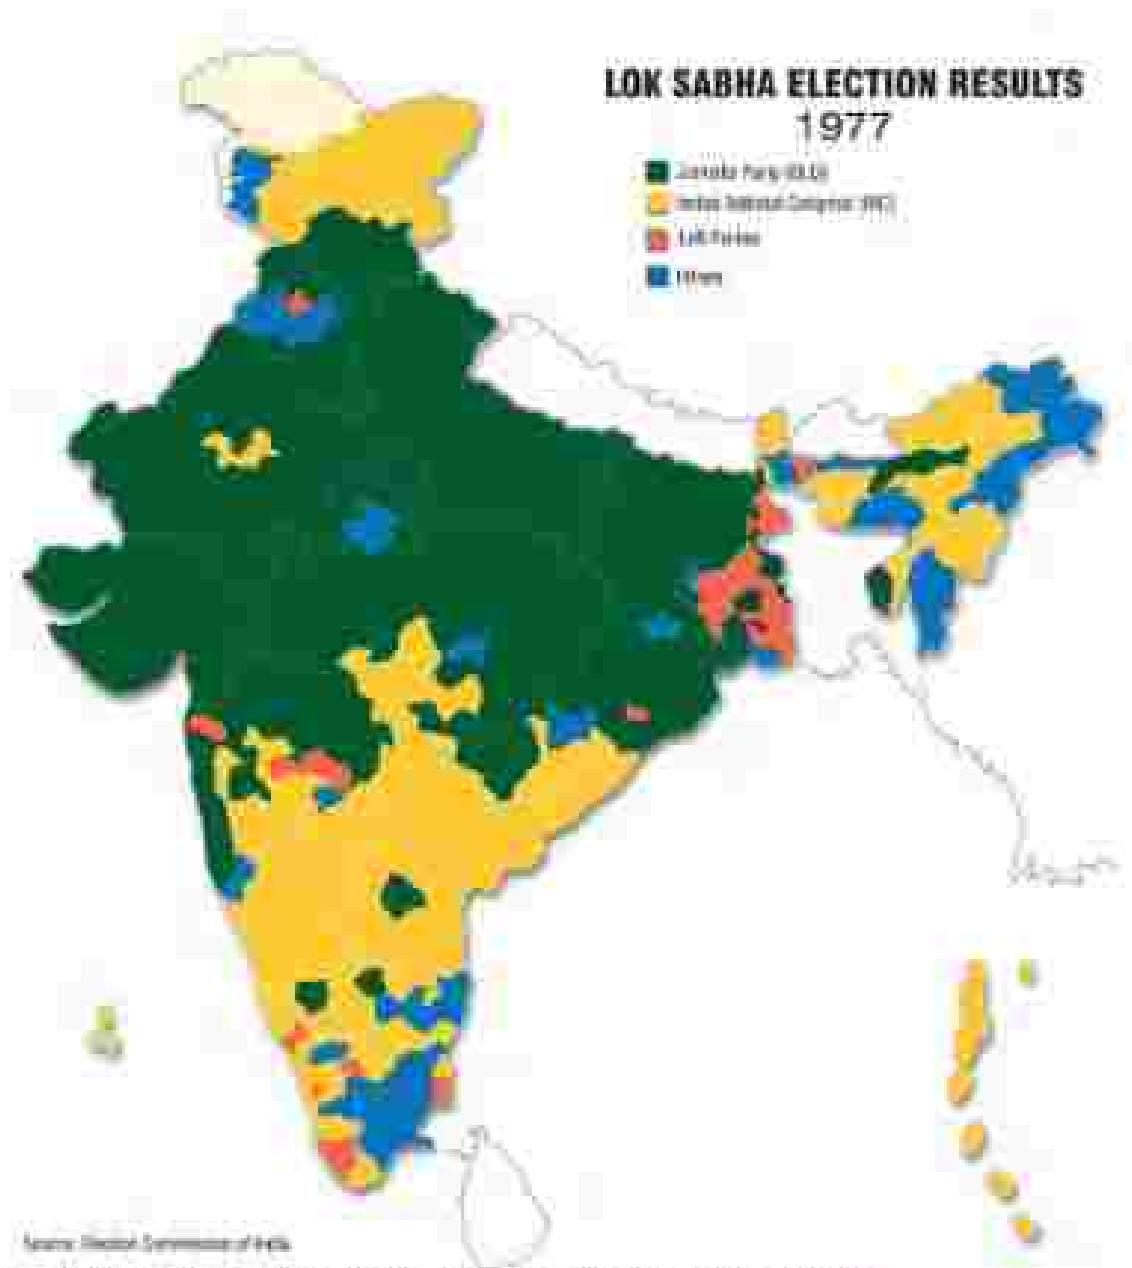

But if you look at the map showing the result of this election, you will notice that Congress did not lose elections all over the country. It retained many seats in Maharashtra, Gujarat and Orissa and virtually swept through the southern States. There are many reasons for this. To begin with, the impact of Emergency was not felt equally in all the States. The forced relocation and displacements, the forced sterilisations, were mostly concentrated in the northern States. But more importantly, with India had experienced some long term changes in the nature of political competition. The middle classes from north India were beginning to move away from the Congress and the Janata party became a platform for many of these sections to come together. In this sense, the elections of 1977 were not merely about the Emergency.

Janata Government

The Janata Party government that came to power after the 1977 elections was far from cohesive. After the election, there was stiff competition among three leaders for the post of Prime Minister – Moraji Desai, who Oath-taking by the first non-Congress government at the centre in 1977. In the picture are Jayaprakash Narayan, J. D. Raghav, Moraji Desai and Atal Behari Vajpeyi.

Source: Indian Government of 1977.

Note: This illustration is not a map drawn to scale and should not be taken to be an accurate depiction of India's external boundaries.

Study this map and identify the states where:

- Congress lost.
- Congress lost very badly and
- these states where Congress and its allies nearly swept the polls.

How can we take inference concerning results in 1977 when the north and the south were so diametrically?

Which are the constituencies in north India that the Congress managed to win?

Chaudhary Charan Singh
(1902–1992)
Prime Minister of India between 1977–1979
1980; freedom fighter, active in the politics of Uttar Pradesh, proponent of rural and agricultural development, left Congress Party and founded Bahujan Samaj Party in 1987; twice Chief Minister of UP; later he was one of the founders of the Janata Party in 1977 and became Deputy Prime Minister and Home Minister (1977–79), founder of Lok Dal.

Janata Party's famous fight inspired many cartoonist that time. Here is a selection:

Credit: N. K. Lohith in The Times of India

Credit: N. K. Lohith in The Times of India

Credit: N. K. Lohith in The Times of India

won the rival to Indira Gandhi twice since 1966–17, Charan Singh, leader of the Bharatiya Lok Dal and a farmers' leader from UP, and Jayaprakash Narayan, who had vast experience as a senior minister in the Congress governments. Eventually Moraji Desai became the Prime Minister but that did not bring the power struggle within the party to an end.

The opposition to Emergency could keep the Janata Party together only for a while. Its critics felt that the Janata Party lacked direction, leadership, and a common programme. The Janata Party government could not bring about a fundamental change in policies from those pursued by the Congress. The Janata Party split and the government which was led by Moraji Desai lost its majority in less than 18 months. Another government headed by Charan Singh was formed on the assistance of the support of the Congress party. But the Congress party later decided to withdraw its support with the result that the Charan Singh government could remain in power for just about four months. Fresh Lok Sabha elections were held in January 1980 in which the Janata Party suffered a comprehensive defeat, especially in north India where it had swept the polls in 1977. Congress party led by Indira Gandhi nearly repeated its great victory in 1971. It won 353 seats and came back to power. The experience of 1977–79 taught another lesson in democratic politics: governments that are seen to be unstable and quarrelsome are severely punished by the voters.

Legacy

But was it only a case of return of Indira Gandhi? Between the election of 1977 and 1980 the party system had changed dramatically. Since 1969, the Congress party had started shedding its character as an umbrella party which accommodated leaders and workers of different ideological dispositions and view points. The Congress party now identified itself with a particular ideology, claiming to be the only socialist and pro-peasant party. Thus with the early nineteen seventies, the Congress's political success depended on attracting people on the basis of sharp social and ideological divisions and the appeal of one leader, Indira Gandhi. With the change in the nature of the Congress party, other opposition parties relied more and more on what is known in Indian politics as 'non-Congressism'. They also realised the need to avoid a division of non-Congress votes in the election. This factor played a major role in the elections of 1977.

In an indirect manner the issue of welfare of the backward castes also began to dominate politics after 1977. As we saw above, the results of 1977 elections were at least partly due to a shift among the backward castes of north India. Following the Lok Sabha elections, many states also held Assembly elections in 1977. Again, the northern States elected non-Congress governments in which the leaders of the backward caste played

Biju Patnaik
1920–1997
Freedom fighter and Congress leader from Orissa; Deputy Prime Minister of India
(1977–79); member of Constituent Assembly; also a Member of Parliament.
With his speech against Mobs in the state assembly of Orissa
he became well-known across the nation from 1982 to 1987; a politician and administrator.

Orbita/Hemant Tadiar

Credit: W. R. Johnson in the Times of India

This cartoon appeared after the election results of 1989.

an important role. The issue of reservations for 'other backward classes' became very controversial in 1990 and following this, the Mandal Commission was appointed by the Janata Party government at the centre. You will read more about this and about the role of the politics of backward classes, in the last chapter. The elections after the Emergency set off the process of this change in the party system.

The Emergency and the period around it can be described as a period of constitutional crisis because it had its origins in the constitutional battle over the jurisdiction of the Parliament and the judiciary. On the other hand, it was also a period of political crisis. The party in power had absolute majority and yet its leadership decided to suspend the democratic process. The makers of India's Constitution trusted that all political parties would honestly abide by the democratic norm. Even during the Emergency, when the government would use extraordinary powers, its use would be within the norms of the rule of law. This expectation led to the wide and open-ended powers given to the government, in times of Emergency. These were abused during the Emergency. This political crisis was more serious than the constitutional crisis.

Another critical issue that emerged during this period was the rule-unfettered of mass protests in a parliamentary democracy. There was clearly a tension between institution-based democracy and democracy based on spontaneous popular participation. This tension may be attributed to the inability of the party system to incorporate the aspirations of the people. In the two chapters that follow we shall study some of the manifestations of this tension, in particular, popular movements and debates around regional identity.

Left Wing Cinema

Hazardous Assets

Rohith, Veena, and Gomu are three ageing and politically engaged activists. Guided by Gomu, they follow different paths. Rohith follows a strong critique of the revolutionary ideology of social transformation. Veena is in favour of achieving success in life whatever the cost. The film narrates the core of their journeys towards their goals and the underlying dispositions.

The film is set in the backdrop of the 1990s. The year choices are products of the expectation and tension of the period. Rohith is not successful in his ambition of starting a revolution, but is so focused in the fight of the poor that he begins working with more than revolution. On the other hand, Veena becomes a typical bourgeois from her "revolutionary" past life.

Year: 2014
Director: Sudhir Mishra
Screenplay: Sudhir Mishra
Story: Sudhir Mishra
Music: Shantanu Moitra
Cast: Kay Kay Menon, Shreyas Talpade, Chitrangada Singh

EXERCISES

1. State whether the following statements regarding the Emergency are correct or incorrect.
 - (a) It was declared in 1975 by Indira Gandhi.
 - (b) It led to the suspension of all fundamental rights.
 - (c) It was proclaimed due to the deteriorating economic conditions.
 - (d) Many Opposition leaders were arrested during the emergency.
 - (e) CPI supported the proclamation of the Emergency.

2. Pick the odd one out in the context of proclamation of Emergency.
 - (a) The call for Total Revolution.
 - (b) The Railway Strike of 1974.
 - (c) The Naxals Movement.
 - (d) The Allahabad High Court verdict.
 - (e) The findings of the Shah Commission Report.

3. Match the following.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) Total Revolution (b) Garibi Hatao (c) Students' Protest (d) Railway Strike 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> i. Indira Gandhi ii. Jayaprakash Narayan iii. Sanjiv Mehta iv. George Fernandes
---	--

4. What were the reasons which led to the mid-term elections in 1977?

5. The Shah Commission was appointed in 1977 by the Janata Party Government. Why was it appointed and what were its findings?

6. What reasons did the Government give for declaring a National Emergency in 1975?

7. The 1977 elections for the first time saw the Opposition coming into power at the Centre. What would you consider as the reasons for this development?

8. Discuss the effects of Emergency on the following aspects of our polity.
 - Effects on civil liberties & rights.
 - Imbalance relationship between the Executive and judiciary.
 - Functioning of Mass Media.
 - Working of the Police and Bureaucracy.

9. In what way did the imposition of Emergency affect the party system in India? Elaborate your answer with examples.

10. Read the passage and answer the questions below:

Indian democracy was never so close to a two-party system as it was during the elections. However, the new years saw a complete change: soon after its defeat, the Indian National Congress split into two groups. The Janata Party also went through major convulsions, aided by Indira Gandhi, who shifted from the People's Commission.

- (a) What made the party system in India look like a two-party system in 1977?
- (b) Many more than two parties existed in 1977. Why then are the authors describing this period as close to a two-party system?
- (c) What caused splits in Congress and the Janata parties?

In this chapter...

Three decades after independence, the people were beginning to get impatient. Their unease expressed itself in various forms. In the previous chapter, we have already gone through the story of electoral upheavals and political crisis. Yet this was not the only form in which popular discontent expressed itself. In the 1970s, diverse social groups like women, students, Dalits and farmers felt that democratic politics did not address their needs and demands. Therefore, they came together under the banner of various social organisations to voice their demands. These assertions marked the rise of popular movements or new social movements in Indian politics.

In this chapter we trace the journey of some of the popular movements that developed after the 1970s in order to understand:

- what are popular movements?
- which sections of Indian society have they mobilised?
- what is the main agenda of these movements?
- what role do they play in a democratic set up like ours?

Photographs on this and the facing page are of the participants and leaders of the Chipko Movement, recognised as one of the best environmental movements in the country.

RISE OF POPULAR MOVEMENTS

Nature of popular movements

Take a look at the opening image of this chapter. What do you see there? Villagers have literally ensnared the trees. Are they playing some game? Or participating in some ritual or festival? Not really. The image here depicts a very unusual form of collective action in which men and women from a village in what is now Uttarakhand were engaged in early 1972. These villagers were protesting against the practices of commercial logging that the government had permitted. They used a novel tactic for their protest – that of hugging the trees to prevent them from being cut down. These protests marked the beginning of a world-famous environmental movement in our country – the Chipko movement.

Chipko movement

The movement began in two or three villages of Uttarakhand when the forest department refused permission to the villagers to fell ash trees for making agricultural tools. However, the forest department allotted the same patch of land to a sports manufacturer for commercial use. This enraged the villagers and they protested against the move of the government. The struggle soon spread across many parts of the Uttarakhand region. Larger issues of ecological and economic exploitation of the region were raised. The villagers demanded that no forest-exploiting contracts should be given to outsiders and local communities should have effective control over natural resources like land, water and forests. They wanted the government to provide raw materials to small industries and ensure development of the system without disturbing the ecological balance. The movement took up economic issues of landless forest workers and asked for guarantees of minimum wage.

Two historic pictures of the early Chipko movement in Champawat, Uttarakhand.

Women's active participation in the Chipko agitation was a very novel aspect of the movement. The forest contractors of the region usually doubled up as suppliers of alcohol to men. Women held sustained agitations against the habit of alcoholism and broadened the agenda of the movement to cover other social issues. The movement achieved a victory when the government banned a ban on felling of trees in the Himalayan region for fifteen years, until the green cover was fully restored. But more than that, the Chipko movement, which started over a single issue, became a symbol of many such popular movements emerging in different parts of the country during the 1970s and later. In this chapter we shall study some of these movements.

Party based movements

Popular movements may take the form of social movements or political movements and there is often an overlap between the two. The nationalist movement, for example, was mainly a political movement, but we also know that deliberations on social and economic issues during the colonial period gave rise to independent social movements like the anti-slavery movement, the khant strike and the trade union movement in early twentieth century. These movements raised issues related to some underlying social conflict.

Some of these movements continued in the post-independence period as well. Trade union movement had a strong presence among industrial workers in major cities like Mumbai, Kolkata and Kanpur. All major political parties established their own trade unions for mobilising these sections of workers. Peasants in the Telangana region of Andhra Pradesh organised massive agitations under the leadership of Communist parties in the early years of independence and demanded redistribution of land to cultivators. Peasants and agricultural labourers in parts of Andhra Pradesh, West Bengal, Bihar and adjoining areas continued their agitations under the leadership of the Marxist-Leninist workers, who were known as the Naxalites (you have already read about the Naxalite movement in the last chapter). The peasants' and the workers' movements mainly focussed on issues of economic injustice and inequality.

These movements did not participate in elections formally. And yet they retained connections with political parties, as many participants in these movements, as individuals and as organisations, were actively associated with parties. These links ensured a better representation of the demands of diverse social sections in party politics.

I don't agree. How can you do politics without a party?

Non-party movements:

In the 1970s and 1980s, many sections of the society became disillusioned with the functioning of political parties. Failure of the Janata experiment and the resulting political instability were the immediate causes, but in the long run the disillusionment was also about economic policies of the state. The model of planned development that we adopted after independence was based on twin goals of growth and distribution. You have read about it in Chapter Three. In spite of the impressive growth in many sectors of economy in the first twenty years of independence, poverty and inequalities persisted on a large scale. Benefits of economic growth did not reach evenly to all sections of society. Existing social inequalities like caste and gender sharpened and complicated the issues of poverty in many ways. There also existed a gulf between the urban industrial sector and the rural agrarian sector. A sense of injustice and deprivation grew among different groups.

Many of the politically active groups lost faith in existing democratic institutions and electoral politics. They therefore chose to step outside of party politics and engage in mass mobilisation for registering their protest. Students and young political activists from various sections of the society were in the forefront in organising the marginalised sections such as Dalits and Adivasis. The middle class young activists launched service organisations and constructive programmes among rural poor. Because of the voluntary nature of their social work, many of these organisations came to be known as voluntary organisations or voluntary sector organisations.

These voluntary organisations chose to remain outside party politics. They did not contest elections at the local or regional level nor did they support any one political party. Most of these groups believed in politics and wanted to participate in it, but not through political parties. Hence, these organisations were called 'non-party political formations'. They hoped that direct and active participation by local groups of citizens would be more effective in resolving local issues than political parties. It was also hoped that direct participation by people will reform the nature of democratic government.

Such voluntary sector organisations still continue their work in rural and urban areas. However, their nature has changed. Of late many of these organisations are funded by external agencies including international service agencies. The ideal of local initiatives is weakened as a result of availability of external funds on a large scale to these organisations.

Popular movements have inspired artisic productions like these posters. The three posters from Top in Bottom are from a campaign against a Coca Cola plant, opposition against a highway and the Periyar river movement.

Top in Bottom
Coca-Colonisation

Top in Bottom
Periyar River Movement

3. 1960: Raasi

Turning their backs to the sun, they journeyed through centuries.
Now we have must refuse to be pilgrims of darkness.
Therefore, our leader, carrying carrying the darkness is now bent;
Now, now we must lift the burden from his back.
Our blood was spilled for this glorious day
And what we get was the right to set stones.
Now, now we must explore the building that kisses the sky.
After a thousand years we were blessed with sunflower-giving fair.
Now, now, we must see sunflowers turn our faces to the sun.

(Raasi translation by Ajayit Singh and Nandini Bhattacharya. © 2012 Raasi)

Dalit Panthers

Read this poem by well-known Marathi poet Narinder Bhushal. Do you know who these 'pilgrims of darkness' in this poem are and who the 'sunflower-giving baba' was that blessed them? The pilgrim were the Dalit communities who had experienced brutal caste prejudices for a long time; it's our society and the poet is referring to Dr. Ambedkar as their liberator. Dalit poets in Maharashtra wrote many such poems during the decade of seventies. These poems were expressions of anguish that the Dalit masses continued to face even after twenty years of independence, but they were also full of hope for the future, a future that Dalit groups wished to shape for themselves. You are aware of Dr. Ambedkar's vision of socio-economic change and his relentless struggle for a dignified future for Dalits outside the Hindu caste-based social structure. It is not surprising that Dr. Ambedkar remains an iconic and inspirational figure in much of Dalit liberation writings.

Origins

By the early nineteen seventies, the first generation Dalit graduates, especially those living in city slums began to assert themselves from various platforms. Dalit Panthers, a militant organization of the Dalit youth, was formed in Maharashtra in 1972 as a part of this assertion. In the post-independence period, Dalit groups were mainly fighting against the perennial caste based inequalities and material injustices that the Dalits faced in spite of constitutional guarantees of equality and justice. Effective implementation of reservations and other such policies of social justice was one of their prominent demands.

You know that the Indian Constitution abolished the practice of untouchability. The government passed laws to that effect in the 1960s and 1970s. And yet, social discrimination and violence against the ex-untouchable groups continued in various ways. Dalit settlements in villages continued to be set apart from the main village. They were denied access to common source of drinking water. Dalit women were discriminated and abused and worst of all, Dalits faced collective atrocities over minor, symbolic issues of caste pride. Legal mechanisms proved inadequate to stop the economic and social oppression of Dalits. On the other hand, political parties supported by the Dalits, like the Republican Party of India, were not successful in electoral politics. These parties always remained marginal; had to ally with some other party in order to win elections and faced constant splits. Therefore the Dalit Panthers resorted to mass action for assertion of Dalits' rights.

Has the condition of Dalits changed much more than that time I keep reading about incidents against Dalits. Is there no one in the future of the entire society?

Activities

Activities of Dalit Panthers mostly centred around fighting increasing atrocities on Dalits in various parts of the State. As a result of sustained agitations on the part of Dalit Panthers along with other like minded organisations over the issue of atrocities against Dalits, the government passed a comprehensive law in 1989 that provided for rigorous punishment for such acts. The larger ideological agenda of the Panthers was to denigrate the caste system and to build an organisation of all oppressed sections like the landless poor peasants and urban industrial workers along with Dalits.

Credit: Ashish and Neethi

The movement provided a platform for Dalit educated youth to use their creativity as a protest activity. Dalit writers protested against the brutalities of the caste system in their numerous autobiographies and other literary works published during this period. These works portraying the life experiences of the most down trodden social sections of Indian society sent shock waves in Marathi literary world. Such literature more broad based and representative of different social sections and initiated contestations in the cultural realm. In the post-Karpoori period, Dalit Panthers got involved in electoral competitions; it also underwent many splits, which led to its decline. Organisations like the Blackcard and Minority Communities' Employees Federation (BAMEF) took over this space.

Bharatiya Kisan Union

The social discontent in Indian society since the seventies was immense. Even those sections that partially benefited in the process of development had many complaints against the state and political parties. Agrarian struggles of the eighties is one such example where better off farmers protested against the policies of the state.

Growth

In January 1988, around twenty thousand farmers had gathered in the city of Meerut, Uttar Pradesh. They were protesting against the government decision to increase electricity rates. The farmers camped for almost three weeks outside the district collector's office until their demands were fulfilled. It was a very disciplined agitation of the farmers and all those days they received regular food supply from the nearby villages. The Meerut agitation was seen as a great show of rural power – power of farmer multitude. These agitating farmers were members of the Bharatiya Kisan Union (BKU), an organisation of farmers from western Uttar Pradesh and Haryana regions. The BKU was one of the leading organisations in the farmers' movement of the eighties.

We have noted in Chapter Three that farmers of Haryana, Punjab and western Uttar Pradesh had benefited in the late 1960s from the state policies of 'green revolution'. Sugar and wheat became the main cash crops in the region since then. The cash crop market faced a crisis in mid-eighties due to the beginning of the process of liberalisation of Indian economy. The BKU demanded higher government floor prices for sugarcane and wheat, abolition of restrictions on the inter-state movement of farm produce, guaranteed supply of electricity at reasonable rates, waiving of repayments due on loans to farmers and the provision of a government pension for farmers.

Similar demands were made by other farmers' organisations in the country. Shekhar Saigal of Mahantashram declared the farmers' movement as a war of Hirak (symbolising rural, agrarian sector) against Keres of India (urban industrial sector). You have already studied in Chapter Three that the debate between industry and agriculture has been one of the prominent issues in India's model of development. The same debate came alive once again in the 1980s when the agricultural sector came under threat due to economic policies of liberalisation.

Credit: Abhijit Dasgupta

A Bharatiya Kisan Union Rally in Punjab.

Characteristics:

Activities conducted by the BKU to pressurise the state for accepting its demands included rallies, demonstrations, sit-ins, and jail-blows (marching imprisonment) agitations. These protests involved tens of thousands of farmers – sometimes over a lakh – from various villages in western Uttar Pradesh and adjoining regions. Throughout the decade of eighties, the BKU organised massive rallies of these farmers in many district headquarters of the State and also at the national capital. Another novel aspect of these mobilisations was the use of caste linkages of farmers. Most of the BKU members belonged to a single community. The organisation used traditional caste parochialism of these communities in bringing them together over economic issues. In spite of lack of any formal organisation, the BKU could sustain itself for a long time because it was based on clan networks among its members. Funds, resources and activities of BKU were mobilised through these networks.

Until the early nineties, the BKU distanced itself from all political parties. It operated as a pressure group in politics with its strength of about numbers. The organisation, along with the other farmers' organisations across States, did manage to get some of their economic demands accepted. The farmers' movement became one of the most successful social movements of the eighties in this respect. The success of the movement was an outcome of political bargaining powers that the members possessed. The movement was active mainly in the prosperous States of the country. Unlike most of the Indian farmers who engage in agriculture for subsistence, members of the organisations like the BKU grew cash crops for the market, like the BKU, farmers' organisations across States remained

Unit members from communities that dominated regional electoral politics.

Sankalp Sangathan of Maharashtra and Mayapuri Sangha of Karnataka, are prominent examples of such organisations of the farmers.

These people are angry.
Who says he wishes to be a farmer? Does he need farmers in the country?

Kisan union wants agriculture out of WTO purview

By Our Staff Correspondent

MUMBAI, MAR 13: The Shantik Kisan Union has warned of consequences if farmers do not manage to keep agriculture out of the purview of the World Trade Organization (WTO).

Addressing a press conference here today, the chief of the group, Mahendra Tare, said a farmers' Sit-in Protest and its rally will be held on March 17 unless farmers in India can pressure the Government to insist on the issue to keep agriculture import-substitution, if it is out of the purview of the WTO. "Farmers and agri-exporters will be invited to the agitation of the farmers from all over India. WTO in the next round of negotiations will be attended by 130 countries. Subsequently, the negotiations will be intensified across the country,"

The Hindu, Mar 16, 2003

FISH WORKERS

Do you know that the Indian fishers constitute the second largest fishing population in the world? Both in the eastern and the western coastal areas of our country hundreds of thousands of families, mainly belonging to the indigenous fishermen communities are engaged in the occupation of fishing. These fish workers lives were threatened immensely when the government permitted entry of mechanised trawlers and technologies like bottom trawling for large-scale harvest of fish in the Indian seas. There were mass meetings and agitations local fish workers organisations fought with the State governments till the issue of the livelihood. Fisheries being a State subject, the fish workers were mostly mobilised at the regional level.

With the coming of policies of economic liberalisation and around the mid-eighties these organisations were compelled to come together on a national level forming the NFF or National Fishworkers Forum. Fish workers from Kerala took the main responsibility of mobilizing fellow workers including women workers from other States. Work of the NFF consolidated when in 1991 it fought a legal battle with the Union government establishment. That was about the government's decision on fishing policy that seemed to favour larger vessels to large commercial vessels including those of the multinational fishing companies. Throughout the nineties the NFF fought various legal and public battles with the government. It worked to protect the interests of those who relied on fishing for subsistence rather than those who invest in the sector for profit. In July 2002, NFF called for a nationwide strike to oppose the move of the government to issue licenses to foreign trawlers. The NFF joined hands with organisations all over the world for protecting ecology sector protecting lives of the fish workers.

Anti-Arrack Movement

When the HKU was mobilising the farmers of the month, an altogether different kind of mobilisation in the rural areas was taking shape in the southern State of Andhra Pradesh. It was a spontaneous mobilisation of women demanding a ban on the sale of alcohol in their neighbourhoods.

Liquor Mafia take to Heels as Women Hit Back

The women of village when the village arrack vendor arrived. They were assaulted by arrack vendor of Chittapuram contractor 2900. This contractor's goods were confiscated and resolved the contractor sent him a iron rods and other lethal to get an end to the sole gang of men to help him welcome. But when the arrack in their village became sales. Women of women resisted the mafia. They conveyed this the village were educated mostly the rural areas to the village and opposed the move took to their heels. The arrack vendor. They The contractors called in present time destroyed turned back the jeep that the police but even they three jeeps full of arrack brought arrack parties had to bear a rever. A to the village. However, week later women who (Based on a report of Telangana Times, October 26, 1992)

Stories of this kind appeared in the Telangana press almost daily during the two months of September and October 1992. The name of the village would change in each case but the story was the same. Rural women from remote villages from the state of Andhra Pradesh fought a battle against alcoholism, against mafias and against the government during this period. These agitations shaped what was known as the anti-arrack movement in the state.

We
from all these nice stories, but they cannot tell us how these moved. But this movement has an end to drink and the country back to it after some time?

Credit: Zohra

लोकवादी आनंद
निर्गमन आनंद
जीव-जीवन सुधारना
से सुधारना और विकास।

Credit: Zohra

Origins

In a village in the interior of Dhuleghatia in Nellore district of Andhra Pradesh, women had enrolled in the Adult Literacy Drive set a large scale in the early nineteen nineties. It is during the discussion in the class that women complained of increased consumption of a locally brewed alcohol – arrack – by men in their families. The habit of alcoholism had taken deep roots among the village people and was ruining their physical and mental health. It affected the rural economy of the region a great deal. Inebriateness grew with increasing scales of consumption of alcohol, men remained absent from their jobs and the contractors of alcohol engaged in crime for securing their monopoly over the arrack trade. Women were the worst sufferers of these ill-effects of alcohol as it resulted in the collapse of the family economy and women had to bear the brunt of violence from the male family members, particularly the husband.

Women taking out procession in Hyderabad in 1990, protesting against the selling of arrack.

Women in Nellore came together in spontaneous local initiatives to protest against arrack and forced closure of the wine shop. The news spread fast and women of about 5000 villages got inspired and met together in meetings, passed resolutions for imposing prohibition and sent them to the District Collector. The arrack auctions in Nellore district were postponed 17 times. This movement in Nellore District slowly spread all over the State.

Linkages

The slogan of the anti-arrack movement was simple—prohibition on the sale of arrack. But this simple demand touched upon larger social, economic and political issues of the region that affected women's life. A close nexus between caste and politics was established around the business of arrack. The State government collected huge revenues by way of taxes imposed on the sale of arrack and was therefore not willing to impose a ban. Groups of local women tried to address these complex issues in their agitation against arrack. They also openly discussed the issue of domestic violence. Their movement, for the first time, provided a platform to discuss private issues of domestic violence. Thus, the anti-arrack movement also became part of the women's movement.

Earlier, women's groups working on issues of domestic violence, the custom of dowry, sexual abuse at work and public places were active mainly among urban middle class women in different parts of the country. Their work led to a realisation that issues of injustice for women and of gender inequalities were complicated in nature. During the decade of the eighties women's movement focused on issues of sexual violence against women – within the family and outside. These groups ran a campaign against the system of dowry and demanded personal and property laws based on the norms of gender equality.

These campaigns contributed a great deal in increasing overall social awareness about women's question. Focus of the women's movement gradually shifted from legal reforms to open social constitutions like the one we discussed above. As a result the movement made demands of equal representation to women in politics during the nineties. We know that 73rd and 74th amendments have granted reservations to women in local level political offices. Demands for extending similar reservations in State and Central legislatures have also been made. A constitution amendment bill to this effect has been proposed but has not received enough support from the Parliament yet. Main opposition to the bill has come from groups, including some women's groups, who are insisting on a separate quota for Dalit and OBC women within the proposed women's quota in higher political offices.

Women's demonstration in favour of anti-dowry act.

Left's Women's Film

AAKROSH

The lawyer Farida Salmaan (Sridevi) is assigned to handle a case of rape victim Bibi Latika (Raveena Tandon) who is charged with kidnapping her child. The lawyer tries hard to find out the truth of the killing but the accused is extremely silent and no one believes her. The lawyer's compassion leads her to take on this difficult case and fight it off by a small worker (Kishore Kumar) who had kidnapped.

But the police officer (Anil Kapoor) and DFO (Shabana Azmi) are determined to solve the case at all costs. It is here that Farida meets Akash (Rishi Kapoor), the Amritkumar (Karan Singh Grover) who is the son of the accused and the child kidnapper and Akash reveals several shocking secrets.

Year: 1990

Director: Gauri Nanda
Story: Vijay Tendulkar
Screenplay: Savitri Devi
Adapted from a story by Shashi Chhatwal, Urvashi Patel, Meenakshi Chatterjee Music: Chaitanya

Narmada Bachao Andolan

Credit: Debraj Ghosh

A poster in support of Narmada Bachao Andolan.

Social movements that we discussed so far raised various issues about the model of economic development that India had adopted at the time of independence. Chipko movement brought out the issue of ecological depletion whereas the farmers complained of neglect of agricultural sector. Social and material conditions of Dalits led to their mass struggles whereas the anti-arkik movement focused on the negative fallout of what was considered development. The issue implicit in all these movements was made explicit by the movements against displacement caused by large developmental projects.

Sardar Sarovar Project

An ambitious developmental project was launched in the Narmada valley of central India in early 1980s. The project consisted of 30 big dams, 135 medium sized and around 3,000 small dams to be constructed on the Narmada and its tributaries that flow across three states of Madhya Pradesh, Gujarat and Maharashtra. Sardar Sarovar Project in Gujarat and the Narmada Sagar Project in Madhya Pradesh were two of the most important and biggest multi-purpose dams planned under the project. Narmada Bachao Andolan, a movement to save Narmada, opposed the construction of these dams and questioned the nature of ongoing developmental projects in the country.

Sardar Sarovar Project is a multipurpose mega scale dam. Its advocates say that it would benefit huge areas of Gujarat and the three adjoining states in terms of availability of drinking water and water for irrigation, generation of electricity and increase in agricultural production. Many more subsidiary benefits like effective flood and drought control in the region were linked to the success of this dam. In the process of construction of the dam 345 villages from these States were expected to get submerged. It required relocation of around two and a half lakh people from these villages. Issues of relocation and project rehabilitation of the project affected people were first raised by local activist groups. It was around 1988-89 that the issues crystallised under the banner of the NBA – a loose collective of local voluntary organisations.

Debates and struggles

Since its inception the NBA linked its opposition to the Sardar Sarovar Project with larger issues concerning the nature of ongoing developmental projects, efficacy of the model of development that of the project-affected people, a serious loss of their means of livelihood and culture and depletion of ecological resources.

Credit: NMA

Initially the movement demanded proper and just rehabilitation of all those who were directly or indirectly affected by the project. The movement also questioned the nature of decision-making processes that go in the making of mega-scale developmental projects. The NMA insisted that local communities must have a say in such decisions and they should also have effective control over natural resources like water, land and forests. The movement also asked why, in a democracy, should some people be made to sacrifice for benefiting others. All these considerations led the NMA to shift from its initial demand for rehabilitation to its position of total opposition to the dam.

A significant agitation of the movement was effective in position in the States benefiting from the project, especially in Gujarat. At the same time, the point about right to rehabilitation has been now recognised by the government and the judiciary. A comprehensive National Rehabilitation Policy formed by the government in 2003 compensates the achievements of the movements like the NMA. However, its demand to stop the construction of the dam was severely criticised by many as obstructing the process of development, denying access to water and to economic development for many. The Supreme Court followed and about what constituted public interest in a democracy. It demanded that there should be a cost-benefit analysis of the major developmental projects completed in the country so far. The movement argued that larger social costs of the developmental projects must be calculated in such an analysis. The social costs included forced resettlement

Box: Report found of poor outcomes and victims being demolished for any developmental project. Why is it always the Adivasis and the poor who are asked to leave their homeland?

Top:
NMA leader Mehta
Pukar and other activists in Chhattisgarh protesting in front of a dam.

Bottom:
A boat rally organised by NMA.

Credit: NMA

Court upheld the environmental criticism by going with the constitution of the dam while also instructing to ensure proper rehabilitation.

Narmada Bachao Andolan continued a sustained agitation for more than twenty years. It used every available democratic strategy to put forward its demands. These included appeals to the judiciary, mobilisation of support at the international level, public rallies in support of the movement and a revival of forms of Satyagraha to convince people about the movement's position. However, the movement could not garner much support among the mainstream political parties - including the opposition parties. In fact, the journey of the Narmada Bachao Andolan depicted a gradual process of disjunction between political parties and social movements in Indian politics. By the end of the 'nineties, however, the NIA was not alone. There emerged many local groups and movements that challenged the logic of large scale developmental projects in their areas. Around this time, the NIA became part of a larger alliance of people's movements that are involved in struggles for similar issues in different regions of the country.

Lessons from popular movements

The history of these popular movements helps us to understand better the nature of democratic politics. We have seen that these non-party movements are neither specific to society nor are these a problem. These movements came up to rectify some problems in the functioning of party politics and should be seen as integral part of our democratic politics. They represented new social groups whose economic and social grievances were not addressed in the realm of electoral politics. Popular movements ensured effective representation of diverse groups and their demands. This reduced the possibility of deep social conflict and disaffection of these groups from democracy. Popular movements suggested new forms of active participation and thus broadened the idea of participation in Indian democracy.

Critics of these movements often argue that collective actions like strikes, sit-ins and rallies disrupt the functioning of the government, delay decision making and destabilise the routines of democracy. Such an argument invites a deeper question: why do these movements resort to such assertive forms of action? We have seen in this chapter that popular movements have raised legitimate demands of the people and have involved high civic participation of citizens. It should be noted that the groups mobilised by these movements are poor, socially and economically disadvantaged sections of the society from marginal social groups. The frequency and the methods used by the movements suggest that the routine functioning of democracy did not have enough space for the voices of these social groups. That

*Ques.
We say that movements can have important role in politics. New experiences are needed and here and there movements can be taken up by parties.*

"Kisan Bachayati", a popular theatre troupe formed by MKSS.

could force an amendment in the Panchayati Raj Act to permit the public to procure certified copies of documents held by the Panchayats. The Panchayats were also required to publish on a board and in newspapers the budget, accounts, expenditure, policies and beneficiaries. In 1996 MKSS formed National Council for People's Right to Information in Delhi to raise RTI to the status of a national campaign. Prior to that the Consumer Education and Research Center, the Press Council and the Shanti committee had proposed a draft RTI law. In 2002 a weak Freedom of Information Act was legislated but never came into force. In 2004 RTI Bill was tabled and received presidential assent in June 2005.

Centre: Rakesh Kapoor/DOCK and Photo: S. Chatterjee

Movement for Right to Information

The movement for Right to Information (RTI) is one of the few recent examples of a movement that did succeed in getting the state to accept its major demand. The movement started in 1990, when a mass based organisation called the Mazdoor Kisan Shakti Sangathan (MKSS) in Rajasthan took the initiative in demanding records of famine relief work and accounts of contractors. The demand was first raised in Bhilwara in a very backward region of Rajasthan. The villagers asserted their right to information by asking for copies of bills and vouchers and names of persons on the muster rolls who have been paid wages on the construction of schools, dispensaries, small dams and community centres. On paper such development projects were all completed, but it was common knowledge of the villagers that there was gross misappropriation of funds. In 1994 and 1995, the MKSS organised Jai Sutkari or Public Hearings, where the administration was asked to explain its stand in public.

The movement had a small success when they

In 1996, the MKSS troupe 'Kisan Bachayati' organized a campaign for the Right to Information Act.

Let's re-search!

Identify at least one popular movement in your city or district in the last 25 years. Collect the following information about that movement:

- When did it start? How long did it last?
- Who were the main leaders? Which social groups supported the movement?
- What were the main issues or demands of the movement?
- Did it succeed? What was the long term effect of the movement? Explain.

In perhaps why these groups turned to mass actions and mobilisation outside the electoral arena.

This can be seen in the recent case of the new economic policies. As you will read in Chapter Nine, there is a growing consensus among political parties over the implementation of these policies. It follows that those marginal social groups who may be adversely affected by these policies get less and less attention from political parties as well as the media. Therefore, any effective protest against these policies involves assertive forms of action that are taken up by the popular movements outside the framework of political parties.

Movements are not only about collective assertions or only about rallies and protests. They involve a gradual process of coming together of people with similar problems, similar demands and similar expectations. But then movements are also about making people aware of their rights and the expectations that they can have from democratic institutions. Social movements in India have been involved in these educative tasks for a long time and have thus contributed to expansion of democracy rather than causing disruptions. The struggle for the right to information is a case in point.

Yet the real life impact of these movements on the nature of public policies seems to be very limited. This is partly because most of the contemporary movements focus on a single issue and represent the interest of one section of society. Thus it becomes possible to ignore their reasonable demands. Democratic politics requires a broad alliance of various disadvantaged social groups. Such an alliance does not seem to be shaping under the leadership of these movements. Political parties are required to bring together different sectional interests, but they also seem to be unable to do so. Parties do not seem to be taking up issues of marginal social groups. The movements that take up these issues operate in a very resistive manner. The relationship between popular movements and political parties has grown weaker over the years, creating a vacuum in politics. In the recent years, this has become a major problem in Indian politics.

EXERCISES

- Which of these statements are incorrect?
The Chipko Movement
 (a) was an environmental movement to prevent cutting down of trees
 (b) used elements of ecological and economic solidarity
 (c) was a movement against alcoholism started by tea-women
 (d) demanded that local communities should have control over their natural resources
- Some of the statements below are incorrect. Identify the incorrect statements and rewrite those with necessary correction:
 (a) Social movements are helping the functioning of Indian democracy
 (b) The main strength of social movements lies in their mass-class and social sectors
 (c) Social movements in India emerged because there were many issues that political parties did not address
- Identify the reasons which led to the Chipko Movement in UP in early 1970s. What was the impact of this movement?
- The Sharadila Kisan Union is a leading organisation highlighting the plight of farmers. What were the issues addressed by it in the nineties and to what extent were they successful?
- The anti-attack movement in Andhra Pradesh drew the attention of the country to some serious issues. What were these issues?
- Would you consider the anti-attack movement as a women's movement? Why?
- Why did the Narmada Bachao Andolan oppose the dam projects in the Narmada Valley?
- Do movements and protests in a country strengthen democracy? Justify your answer with examples.
- What issues did the Dalit Panthers address?
- Read the passage and answer questions below:
 — nearly all new social movements have emerged as corrective to their realises environmental degradation, violation of the status of women, destruction of tribal cultures and the undermining of human rights, none of which are in and by themselves transformative of the social order. They are in that way like different from revolutionary ideologies of the past. But they are less like in their being so deeply fragmented — a large part of the space occupied by the new social movements seem to be suffering from various characteristics which have prevented them from being relevant to the truly oppressed and the poor in the form of a solid unified movement of the people. They are too fragmented, reactive, ad hocish, providing no comprehensive framework of basic social change. Nor being anti-the or that anti-West, anti-capitalist anti-development etc does not make them any more coherent, any more relevant to oppressed and peripheralised communities. — Ram Kumar

- (a) What is the difference between 'New' social movements and 'Developmental' ideologies?
- (b) What according to the author are the 'lessons' of 'social movements'?
- (c) If social movements address specific issues, would you say that they are fragmented or that they are more focused? Give reasons for your answer by giving examples.

I II III

Trace news reports for a week and identify any three news items that you could classify as 'Popular Movements'. Find out the core demands of these movements, the methods used by them to pursue their demands and the response of political parties to these demands.

हमें हर भारतवासी का सहयोग चाहिए
अन्याय-शोभण व दमन के बिलाफ
उत्तरारण्ड राज्य के निर्माण के लिए।

उत्तरारण्ड राज्य निर्माण
कमीटी का आमना सामना

जल्दी तैयार करें अपनी जनता
उत्तरारण्ड राज्य निर्माण मार्ग।

जनता पार्टी
जनता की ओर

उत्तरारण्ड का नाम हमने दिया दिया
दिल्ली में लड़ाकू वंश निर्माण की

संघ राज्य निर्माण
उत्तरारण्ड राज्य निर्माण की।

WE SEEK SUPPORT OF EVERY INDIAN AGAINST INJUSTICE, EXPLOITATION AND OPPRESSION FOR THE CREATION OF UTTARAKHAND STATE

www.uttarakhandformationcommittee.org.in Regional aspirations are usually expressed in the language of the region and addressed to the local population or the rulers. This caused greater focus of administrative measures on all the different citizens in many different languages and their differences.

The compatibility of the regional aspirations with nationalist sentiments.

In this chapter...

In the first chapter of this book, we studied the process of 'nation-building' in the first decade after independence. But nation-building is not something that can be accomplished once and for all times to come. In the course of time new challenges came up. Some of the old problems had never been fully resolved. As democratic experiment unfolded, people from different regions began to express their aspirations for autonomy. Sometimes these aspirations were expressed outside the framework of the Indian union. These involved long struggles and often aggressive and armed assertions by the people.

This new challenge came to the fore in the 1980s, as the Janata experiment came to an end and there was some political stability at the centre. This decade will be remembered for some major conflicts and accords in the various regions of the country, especially in Assam, the Punjab, Mizoram and the developments in Jammu and Kashmir. In this chapter we study these cases so as to ask some general questions:

- Which factors contribute to the tensions arising out of regional aspirations?
- How has the Indian state responded to these tensions and challenges?
- What kind of difficulties are faced in balancing democratic rights and national unity?
- What are the lessons here for achieving unity with diversity in a democracy?

REGIONAL ASPIRATIONS

Region and the Nation

1980s may be seen as a period of rising regional aspirations for autonomy, often outside the framework of the Indian State. These movements frequently involved armed assertions by the people, their repression by the government, and a collapse of the political and electoral processes. It is also not surprising that most of these struggles were long drawn and concluded in negotiated settlements or accords between the central government and the groups leading the movement for autonomy. The accords were reached after a process of dialogue that aimed to settle contentious issues within the constitutional framework. Yet the journey to the accord was always tumultuous and often violent.

Indian approach

In studying the Indian Constitution and the process of nation-building, we have repeatedly come across one basic principle of the Indian approach to diversity – the Indian nation shall not deny the rights of different regions and linguistic groups to retain their own culture. We decided to live a united social life without losing the distinctiveness of the numerous cultures that constituted it. Indian nationalism sought to balance the principles of unity and diversity. The nation would not mean the rejection of the region. In this sense the Indian approach was very different from the one adopted in many European countries where they saw cultural diversity as a threat to the nation.

India adopted a democratic approach to the question of diversity. Democracy allows the political expressions of regional aspirations and does not look upon them as anti-national. Besides, democratic politics allows parties and groups to address the people on the basis of their regional identity, aspiration and specific regional problems. Thus, in the course of democratic politics, regional aspirations get strengthened. At the same time, democratic politics also ensure that regional issues and problems will receive adequate attention and accommodation in the policy making process.

Such an arrangement may sometimes lead to tensions and problems. Sometimes, the assertive national unity may overshadow the regional needs and aspiration. At other times a concern for regionalism may bind us to the larger needs of the nation. Therefore, political conflicts over issues of power of the regions, their rights and their separate existence are common to nations that want to respect diversity while trying to keep and retain unity.

Does a region that expresses its right to autonomy not pose a danger to the functioning of the state? Can't it be just dangerous at times?

Areas of tension

In the first chapter you have seen how immediately after independence our nation had to cope with many difficult issues like Partition, displacement, integration of Princely States, reorganisation of states and so on. Many observers, both within the country and from outside, had predicted that India as one unified country cannot last long. Soon after independence, the issue of Jammu and Kashmir came up. It was not only a conflict between India and Pakistan. More than that, it was a question of the political aspirations of the people of Kashmir valley. Similarly, in some parts of the north-east, there was no consensus about being a part of India. First Nagaland and then Mizoram witnessed strong movements demanding separation from India. In the south, some groups from the Dravid movement briefly toyed with the idea of a separate country.

These events were followed by mass agitations in many parts for the formation of linguistic States. Today's Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Maharashtra, and Gujarat were among the regions affected by these agitations. In some parts of southern India, particularly Tamil Nadu, there were protests against making Tamil the official national language of the country. In the north, there were strong pro-Hindi agitations demanding that Hindi be made the official language immediately. From the late 1950s, people speaking the Punjabi language started agitating for a separate State for themselves. This demand was finally accepted and the States of Punjab and Haryana were created in 1966. Later, the States of Chhattisgarh, Jharkhand and Jharkhand (now Jharkhand) were created. Thus the challenge of diversity was met by enlarging the internal boundaries of the country.

Yet this did not lead to resolution of all problems and for all times. In some regions, like Nagaland and Nagaland, the challenge was so complex that it could not be resolved in the first phase of nation-building. Besides, new challenges came up in States like Punjab, Assam and Mizoram. Let us study these cases in some detail. In this process let us also go back to some of the earlier instances of difficulties of nation-building. The successes and failures in these cases are instructive and timely for a study of our past, but also for an understanding of India's future.

Why does the challenge always come from the border States?

Jammu and Kashmir

You may have heard about the violence in Jammu and Kashmir (JK). This has resulted in the loss of many lives and the displacement of many families. The 'Kashmir issue' is always seen as a major issue between India and Pakistan. But the political situation in the State has many dimensions.

Jammu and Kashmir comprises three social and political regions: Jammu, Kashmir and Ladakh. The heart of the Kashmir region is the Kashmir valley, the people are Kashmiri speaking and mostly Muslim with a small Kashmiri speaking Hindu minority. Jammu region is a mix of foothills and plains, of Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs and speakers of various languages. The Ladakh region is mountainous, has very little population which is equally divided between Buddhists and Hindus.

The 'Kashmir issue' is not just a dispute between India and Pakistan. This issue has external and internal dimensions. It involves the issue of Kashmiri identity known as Kashmiriyat and the aspirations of the people of JK for political autonomy.

Roots of the problem

Before 1947, Jammu and Kashmir (JK) was a Princely State. Its Hindu ruler, Hari Singh, did not want to merge with India and tried to negotiate with India and Pakistan to have an independent state for his state. The Pakistani leaders thought the Kashmir region belonged to Pakistan, since majority population of the State was Muslim. But this is not how the people themselves saw it – they thought of themselves as Kashmiris above all. The popular movement in the State, led by Sheikh Abdullah of the National Conference, wanted to get rid of the Maharaja, but was against joining Pakistan. The National Conference was a secular organisation and had a long association with the Congress. Sheikh Abdullah was a personal friend of some of the leading nationalist leaders including Nehru.

In October 1947, Pakistan sent tribal infiltrators from its side to capture Kashmir. This forced the Maharaja to ask for Indian military help. India extended the military support and drove back

Note: This illustration is not a map drawn to scale and should not be taken to be an authentic depiction of India's external boundaries.

In this case, why don't they name the state as 'Jammu-Kashmir' instead of 'JK' instead?
JKL_M y

a. 1881
d. 197
Known as Periyar (the renowned strong)

Supporter of atheism, famous for his anti-caste protests and rediscovery of Dravidian identity, mostly a worker of the Communist Party, started the self-respect movement (1925). As the anti-Brahmin movement worked for the Justice party and later founded Dravidian movement opposed to Hindu and Brahmanical control. This provoked the three major non-Indians and Brahmins are Aryans.

Dravidian Movement

the whole of south India; however lack of support from other States limited the movement to Tamil Nadu.

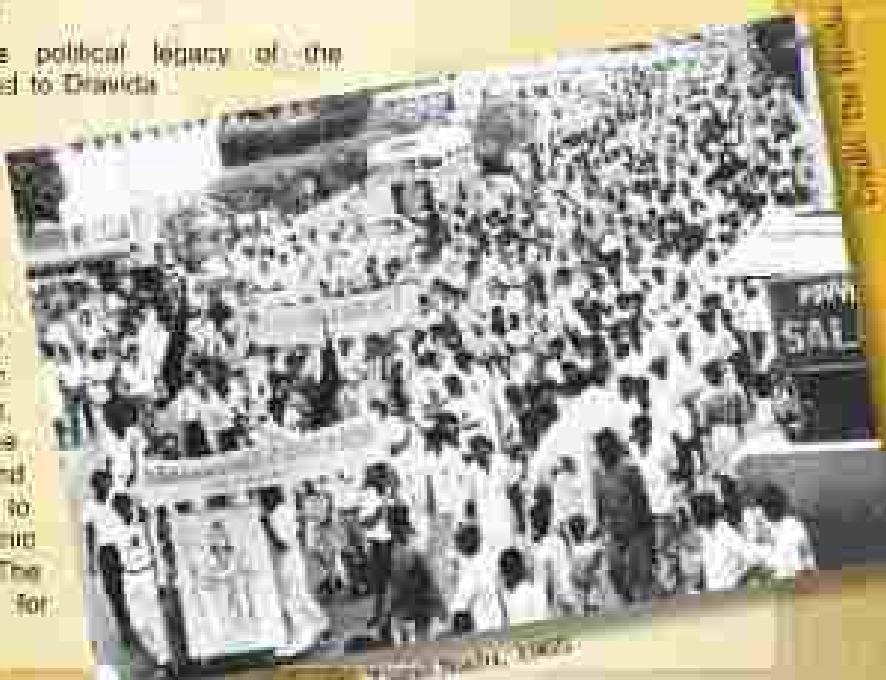

The DMK split and the political legacy of the movement was transferred to Dravida

Munnetra Kazhagam (DK). The DK made its entry into politics with a mass protest agitation in 1950-54. First it demanded the restoration of the original name of Kallakudi railway station which had been renamed Chembaram, after an industrial house from the home. This demand brought out its opposition to the North Indian economic and cultural symbols. The second agitation was for residential one seat

seat in each constituency at the same election. This popular slogan sums up the distinctive demands of one of India's most effective regional movements, the Dravidian movement, at one point of time. This was one of the first regional movements in Indian politics. Though some sections of this movement had ambitions of creating a Dravidian nation, the movement did not take to arms. It used democratic means like public debates and the electoral platform to achieve its ends. This strategy paid off as the movement acquired political power in the State and also became influential at the national level.

The Dravidian movement led to the formation of Dravida Kazhagam (DK) under the leadership of Tamil social reformer E.V. Ramasami (Periyar). The organisation strongly opposed the Brahminic orthodoxy and affirmed regional pride against the political-economic and cultural domination of the North. Initially, the Dravidian movement spoke in terms of A large crowd of people gathered during a protest or rally, likely related to the Dravidian movement.

HINDI PROTAGONISTS ALLEGEDLY BID TO REVERSE POLICY

A

Hindi the country's official language. The success of the anti-Hindi agitation of 1965 added to the DMK's popularity.

Sustained political agitations brought the DMK to power in the Assembly elections of 1967. Since then, the Dravidian parties have dominated the politics of Tamil Nadu. Though the DMK split after the death of its leader C. Annadurai, the influence of Dravidian parties in Tamil politics actually increased. After the split there were two parties – the DMK and the All India Anna DMK (AIADMK) – that claimed Dravidian legacy. Both these parties have dominated politics in Tamil Nadu for the last four decades. Since 1990, one of these parties has been a part of the ruling coalition at the Centre. In the 1990s, many other Dravidian parties have emerged. These include Maruthandalachi Dravida Munnai Kazhagam (MDMK), Pattai Makkal Katchi (PMK) and Desiya Murpokku Dravida Kazhagam (DMK).

All these parties have kept alive the issue of regional pride in the politics of Tamil Nadu. Initially seen as a threat to Indian nationalism, regional politics in Tamil Nadu is a good example of the compatibility of regionalism and nationalism.

giving Tamil cultural history greater importance in school curricula. The third agitation was against the craft education scheme of the State government, which it alleged was linked to the Brahmanical social outlook. It also agitated against making

Hindi the country's official language. The success of the anti-Hindi agitation of 1965 added to the DMK's popularity.

"ALL DAY CAN'T READ ENGLISH BUTTER!"

Courtesy: Hindustan Times

Sheikh Abdullah

Sheikh Abdullah was a popular leader of the Jammu and Kashmir region. He was a leader of the National Conference party and became the first Prime Minister of Jammu and Kashmir immediately after its accession to India in 1947. He served as the Chief Minister of the State under an agreement with the Government of India from 1953 to 1964 and again from 1968 to 1972. He became Chief Minister of the State again in 1974.

the infiltrators from Kashmir valley. But only after the Maharaja had signed an 'Instrument of Accession' with the Government of India. It was also agreed that once the situation normalised, the views of the people of J&K will be ascertained about their future. Sheikh Abdullah took over as the Prime Minister of the State of J&K (i.e. head of the government in the State was then called Prime Minister) in March 1948. India agreed to maintain the autonomy of Jammu and Kashmir.

External and internal disputes

Since then, the politics of Jammu and Kashmir always remained controversial and conflict ridden both for external and internal reasons. Evidently, Pakistan has always claimed that Muslim-majority valley should be part of Pakistan. As we noted above, Pakistan sponsored a tribal invasion of the State in 1947, as a consequence of which one part of the State came under Pakistan control. India claims that this area is under illegal occupation. Pakistan describes this area as "Azad Kashmir". Ever since 1947, Kashmir has remained a major focus of conflict between India and Pakistan.

Internally, there is a dispute about the status of Kashmir within the Indian Union. You know that Kashmir was given a special status by Article 370 in our Constitution. You have studied about the special provisions under Articles 370 and 371 last year in Indian Constitution at Work. Article 370 gives greater autonomy to Jammu and Kashmir compared to other States of India. The State has its own Constitution. All provisions of the Indian Constitution are not applicable to the State. Laws passed by the Parliament apply to J&K only if the State agrees.

This special status has provoked two opposite reactions. There is a section of people outside of J&K that believes that the special status of the State conferred by Article 370 does not allow full integration of the State with India. This section feels that Article 370 should therefore be revoked and J&K should be like any other State in India.

Another section, mostly Kashmiris, believe that the autonomy conferred by Article 370 is not enough. A section of Kashmiris have expressed at least three major grievances. First, the promise that Arrears would be referred to the people of the State after the situation created by tribal invasion was normalised, has not been fulfilled. This has generated the demand for a 'Jehlsiefi'. Secondly, there is a feeling that the special federal status guaranteed by Article 370, has been eroded in practice. This has led to the demand for restoration of autonomy of 'Greater State Autonomy'. Thirdly, it is felt that democracy which is practised in the rest of India has not been similarly institutionalised in the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Let's Watch a Film!

Roja

Tamil film depicting the trials of Roja, a newly wed and naive wife from the North. Tragedy is inflicted by Sivaji, Tamil folk singer-songwriter who is caught in a struggle to decode the story message. As love blossoms between the husband and his wife, the feelings he harboured. The atmosphere around and their joint keeper, her and her in marriage of Roja.

Roja will illustrate the story of love blooming at the heart of culture and politics. Since the movie has the background of Tamil Brahmin society, it must be a good movie. The film was dubbed in English and many other Indian languages.

Year: 1992
Director: Mani Ratnam
Genre: Melodrama
Cast: (Lead actress) Meena, Aishwarya, Prakash Kumar,
 Jayaram

Politics since 1949

After taking over as the Prime Minister, Sheikh Abdullah initiated major land reforms and other policies which benefitted ordinary people. But there was a growing difference between him and the central government about his position on Hashim's status. He was dismissed in 1953 and kept in detention for a number of years. The leadership that succeeded him did not enjoy as much popular support and was able to rule the State mainly due to the support of the Centre. There were serious allegations of malpractices and rigging in various elections.

During most of the period between 1953 and 1974, the Congress party exercised a lot of influence on the politics of the State. A truncated National Conference (under Sheikh Abdullah) remained in power with the active support of Congress for some time but later it merged with the Congress. Thus the Congress gained direct control over the government in the State. In the meanwhile, there were several attempts to reach an agreement between Sheikh Abdullah and the Government of India. Finally, in 1974 Indira Gandhi reached an agreement with Sheikh Abdullah and he became the Chief Minister of the State. He resolved the National Conference which was elected with

Sir Nehru kept his promises intend to just for such a long period now and they last about 10"

The Times of India

SHEIKH ABDULLAH ARRESTED

PEACEFUL DEMONSTRATION "People have right to express dissenting views and to protest against the Government."

CHARGES OF CORRUPTION AND MALADMINISTRATION

Sheikh Ghulam Mohammed
Sworn In As Prime Minister

POLICE OPEN FIRE ON VIOLENT DEMONSTRATORS

The Times of India News Service
THERE was a violent clash between the demonstrators and the police at Srinagar on Saturday morning. The crowd, which had gathered to protest against the arrest of Sheikh Abdullah, charged upon the police who opened fire on them. Several persons were killed and many others were injured.

GRANT THROAT TO FREEDOM

MONTEZUMA
EAST ASIAN FORUM
OPEN

CALM U.S. RECEPTION TO H-BOMB CLAIM

SERIOUS CONSIDERATION OF M. SIEBELIN'S SPEECH

HIGH SATISFACTION IN DELHI

"Early Action By The Ruler & Regent"

The Times of India News Service
THE early action taken by the ruler and regent of Jammu and Kashmir to restore law and order in the state has been highly appreciated by the people here.

INDIA'S POLITICAL POSITION

The Times of India News Service
INDIA'S political position in the world has been strengthened by the early action taken by the ruler and regent of Jammu and Kashmir to restore law and order in the state.

INDIA'S POLITICAL POSITION

INDIA'S POLITICAL
POSITION

majority in the assembly elections held in 1977. Sheikh Abdullah died in 1982 and the leadership of the National Conference went to his son, Farooq Abdullah, who became the Chief Minister. But he was soon dismissed by the Governor and a breakaway faction of the National Conference came to power for a brief period.

The dismissal of Farooq Abdullah's government due to the intervention of the Centre generated a feeling of resentment in Kashmir. The confidence that Kashmiris had developed in the democratic processes after the armed between Indira Gandhi and Sheikh Abdullah, received a set-back. The feeling that the Centre was intervening in politics of the State was further strengthened when the National Conference in 1989 agreed to have an electoral alliance with the Congress, the ruling party in the Centre.

Insurgency and after

It was in this environment that the 1987 Assembly election took place. The official results showed a massive victory for the National Conference-Congress alliance and Farooq Abdullah returned as Chief Minister. But it was widely believed that the results did not reflect popular choice and that the entire election process was rigged. A popular resentment had already been brewing in the State against the inefficient administration since early 1990s. This was now aggravated by the continually prevailing feeling that democratic processes were being undermined at the behest of the Centre. This generated a political crisis in Kashmir which became severe with the rise of insurgency.

By 1990, the State had come in the grip of a militant movement mobilised around the cause of a separate Kashmiri nation. The insurgents got moral, material and military support from Pakistan. For a number of years the State was under President's rule and effectively under the control of the armed forces. Throughout the period from 1990, Jammu and Kashmir experienced violence at the hands of the insurgents and through army action. Assembly elections in the State were held only in 1996 in which the National Conference led by Farooq Abdullah came to power with a demand for regional autonomy for Jammu and Kashmir. J&K experienced a very late election in 2002. The National Conference failed to win a majority and was replaced by People's Democratic Party (PDP) and Congress coalition government.

Separatism and beyond

Separatist politics which surfaced in Kashmir from 1989 has taken different forms and is made up of various strands. There is one strand

A cartoon's take on the Sheikh Abdullah-Indira Gandhi Agreement which led to his becoming the Chief Minister.

“ The Congress were promised that if they would accept the demand of their elected leader for 1990, that state would never permit them to rule otherwise.

R. K. Narre
Chairman of J&K State
the dissolution of Farooq Abdullah's government.

This illustration represents a person who wants a separate Kasmirī nation, independent of India and Pakistan. Then there are groups that want Kashmir to merge with Pakistan. Besides them, there is a third strand which wants greater autonomy for the people of the State within the Indian union. The idea of autonomy attracts the people of Jammu and Ladakh regions in a different way. They often complain of neglect and backwashness. Therefore, the demand for intra-State autonomy is as strong as the demand for the State autonomy.

192 50

Master Tara Singh (1887–1971), prominent Sikh religious and political leader, one of the early leaders of the Shramik Gurukarta Sangathan Committee (SGC), leader of the Akali movement, supporter of the freedom movement but opposed to Congress policy of negotiating only with the Muslims after independence. He was the senior most advocate of formation of separate Punjab State.

of separatists who want a separate Kasmirī nation, independent of India and Pakistan. Then there are groups that want Kashmir to merge with Pakistan. Besides them, there is a third strand which wants greater autonomy for the people of the State within the Indian union. The idea of autonomy attracts the people of Jammu and Ladakh regions in a different way. They often complain of neglect and backwashness. Therefore, the demand for intra-State autonomy is as strong as the demand for the State autonomy.

The initial period of popular support to militancy has now given way to the urge for peace. The Centre has started negotiations with various separatist groups, instead of demanding a separate nation. Most of the separatists in dialogue are trying to re-negotiate a relationship of the State with India.

Jammu and Kashmir is one of the living examples of plural society and politics. Not only are there diversities of all kind (religious, cultural, linguistic, ethnic, tribal) but there are also divergent political aspirations. However, despite all these diversities and differences on the one hand, and the continued situation of conflict on the other, the plural and secular culture of the State has remained largely intact.

Punjab

The decade of 1980s also witnessed major developments in the State of Punjab. The social composition of the State changed first with Partition and later on after the carving out of Haryana and Himachal Pradesh. While the rest of the country was reorganised on linguistic lines in 1950s, Punjab had to wait till 1966 for the creation of a Punjabi-speaking State. The Akali Dal, which was formed in 1920 as the political wing of the Sikhs, had led the movement for the formation of a Punjabi state. The Sikhs were now a majority in the truncated State of Punjab.

Political context

After the reorganisation, the Akalis came to power in 1977 and then in 1977. On both the occasions it was a coalition government. The Akalis discovered that despite the redefining of the boundaries, their political position remained precarious. Firstly, their government was dismissed by the Centre mid-way through its term. Secondly, they did not enjoy strong support among the Hindus. Thirdly, the Sikh community, like all other religious communities, was internally differentiated on caste and class lines. The Congress got more support among the Dalits, whether Hindu or Sikh, than the Akalis.

It was in this context that during the 1970s a section of Akalis began to demand political autonomy for the region. This was enacted in a resolution passed at their conference at Anandpur Sahib in 1973. The Anandpur Sahib Resolution asserted regional autonomy and wanted to redefine centre-state relationship in the country. The resolution also spoke of the aspirations of the Sikh gurus (spiritual or unified) and declared its goal as attaining the Khalsa (dominance or hegemony) of the Sikhs. The Resolution was a plea for strengthening federalism, but it could also be interpreted as a plea for a separate Sikh nation.

The Resolution had a limited appeal among the Sikh masses. A few years later, after the Akali government had been dismissed in 1980, the Akali Dal launched a movement on the question of the distribution of water between Punjab and its neighbouring States. A section of the religious leaders raised the question of autonomous Sikh identity. The more extreme elements started advocating separation from India and the creation of 'Khilistan'.

Cycle of violence

Soon, the leadership of the movement passed from the moderate Akalis to the extremist elements and took the form of armed insurgency. These militants made their headquarters inside the Sikh holy shrine, the Golden Temple in Amritsar, and turned it into an armed fortress. In June 1984, the Government of India carried out 'Operation Blue Star', code name for army action in the Golden Temple. In this operation, the Government could successfully flush out the militants, but it also damaged the historic temple and deeply hurt the sentiments of the Sikhs. A large proportion of Sikhs in India and abroad saw the military operation as an attack on their faith and this gave further impetus to militant and extremist groups.

Still more tragic form of events complicated the Punjab problem further. Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated on 31 October 1984 outside her residence by her bodyguards. Both the assassins were Sikhs and wanted to take revenge for Operation Blue Star. While the entire country was shocked by this development, in Delhi and in many parts of northern India violence broke out against the Sikh community. The violence against the Sikhs continued for almost a week. More than two thousand Sikhs were killed in the national capital, the area worst affected by this violence. Hundreds of Sikhs were killed in other parts of the country, especially in places like Faridpur, Bokaro and Chas. Many Sikh families lost their male members and thus suffered great emotional and heavy financial loss. What hurt the Sikhs most was that the government took a long time in restoring normalcy and that the perpetrators of this violence were not effectively punished. Twenty years later, speaking in the Parliament in 2006, Prime Minister Manmohan Singh expressed regret over those killings and apologized to the nation for the anti-Sikh violence.

Left: Indian prime minister Indira Gandhi (1917–1984), who became president of the Indian National Congress in 1977. She reached an agreement with Prime Minister P. V. Narasimha Rao to end the emergency of 1975, assassinated by unidentified Sikhs in 1984.

Women looking at a wall painting depicting India's Comrades

66 There is also evidence to show that on 21 November meetings were held at places which could organise attacks, were convened and were given instructions to kill Sikhs and burn their houses and shops. The attacks were made in a systematic manner and without much fear of the police, about suggesting that they were assured that they would not be harassed while committing these acts or even after.

99

Human Rights Commission of India's Report, Vol. I, 2006.

Road to peace

After coming to power following the election in 1984, the new Prime Minister Indira Gandhi initiated a dialogue with moderate Akali leaders. In July 1985, he reached an agreement with Harchand Singh Longowal, then the President of the Akali Dal. This agreement, known as the Indira-Gandhi-Longowal Accord or the Punjab Accord, was a step towards bringing normalcy to Punjab. It was agreed that Chandigarh would be transferred to Punjab, a separate commission would be appointed to resolve the border dispute between Punjab and Haryana, and a tribunal would be set up to decide the sharing of Ravi-Sutlej river water among Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan. The agreement also provided for compensation to and better treatment of those affected by the militancy in Punjab and the withdrawal of the application of Armed Forces Special Powers Act in Punjab.

However, peace did not come easily or immediately. The cycle of violence continued nearly for a decade. Military and counter-insurgency violence led to excesses by the police and violations of human rights. Politically, it led to fragmentation of the Akali Dal. The central government had to impose President's rule in the State and the normal electoral and political process was suspended. It was not easy to restore the political process in the atmosphere of suspicion and violence. When elections were held in Punjab in 1992, only 24 per cent of the electors turned out to vote.

Militancy was eventually crushed by the security forces. But the losses incurred by the people of Punjab – Sikhs and Hindus alike – were enormous. Peace returned to Punjab by the middle of 1990s. The alliance of Akali Dal (Gurdwara) and the BJP scored a major victory in 1997, in the first normal elections to the State in the post-militancy era. The State is once again preoccupied with questions of economic development and social change. Though religious identities continue to be important for the people, politics has gradually moved back along secular lines.

The Times of India brought out a special mid-day edition on the day Indira Gandhi was assassinated.

“I have no hesitation in apologizing not only to the Sikh community but the whole Indian nation because what took place on April 15 is the negation of the concept of nationalism and what is enshrined in our Constitution. No, I am not standing on any false premise on behalf of our Government; on behalf of the entire people of this country, I have my hand in shame that such things took place too, we have got to learn from our mistakes, there are lessons in the affairs of nations. The past is with us, we cannot run away from the past, but at the same time, we have the willpower and we have the ability to make better future for all of us.”

Prime Minister
Dr. Manmohan Singh
addressing in Delhi
National Stadium on 11 August 2005.

The North-East

In the North-East, regional aspirations reached a turning point in 1960s. This region now consists of seven States, also referred to as the 'seven sisters'. The region has only 4 per cent of the country's population but about twice as much share of its area. A small corridor of about 2200 kilometers connects the region to the rest of the country. Otherwise the region shares boundaries with China, Myanmar and Bangladesh and serves as India's gateway to South East Asia.

The region has witnessed a lot of change since 1947. Tripura, Manipur and Khasi Hills of Meghalaya were erstwhile Princely States which merged with India after independence. The entire region of North-East has undergone considerable political reorganisation. Nagaland State was created in 1960; Meghalaya, Manipur and Tripura in 1972 while Arunachal Pradesh and Assam became separate states only in 1986. The Partition of India in 1947 had reduced the North-East to a landlocked region and affected its economy. Cut off from the rest of India, the region suffered neglect in developmental terms. Its politics too remained isolated. At the same time, most States in this region underwent major demographic changes due to influx of migrants from neighbouring States and countries.

The isolation of the region, its complex social character and its backwardness compared to other parts of the country have all resulted in the complicated set of demands from different states of the North-East. The vast international border and weak communication between the North-East and the rest of India have further added to the delicate nature of politics there. Three issues dominate the politics of North-East: demands for autonomy, movements for secession, and opposition to outsiders. Major initiatives on the first issue in the 1970s set the stage for some dramatic developments on the second and the third in the 1980s.

Note: This illustration is not a map drawn to scale and should not be taken to be an authentic depiction of India's external boundaries.

Demands for autonomy

At independence the entire region except Manipur and Tripura comprised the State of Assam. Demands for political autonomy arose when the non-Assamese felt that the Assam government was imposing Assamese language on them. There were opposition and protest riots throughout the State. Leaders of the major tribal communities wanted to separate from Assam. They formed the Eastern India Tribal Union which later transformed into a more comprehensive All Party Hill Leaders Conference in 1960. They demanded a tribal State to be carved out of Assam. Finally instead of one tribal State, several States got carved out of Assam. At different points of time the Central Government had to create Meghalaya, Mizoram and Arunachal Pradesh out of Assam. Tripura and Manipur were upgraded into States too.

The reorganization of the North-East was completed by 1972. But this was not the end of autonomy demands in this region. In Assam, for example, communities like the Bodos, Karbis and Dimasas wanted separate States. They worked for this demand by mobilising public opinion and popular movement as well as through insurgency. Often the same area was claimed by more than one community. It was not possible to go on making smaller and yet smaller States. Therefore, some other provisions of our federal set up were used to satisfy their autonomy demands while remaining in Assam. Karbis and Dimasas have been granted autonomy under District Councils while Bodos were recently granted Autonomous Council.

Secessionist movements

Demands for autonomy were easier to respond to, for these involved using the various provisions in the Constitution for accommodation of diversities. It was much more difficult when some groups demanded a separate country, and in many cases did so consistently as a principled position. The country's leadership faced this problem for a very long time in at least two States in the North-East. A comparison of these two cases offers an lesson in democratic politics.

After independence, the Mizo Hills area was made an autonomous district within Assam. Some Mizos believed that they were never a part of British India and therefore did not belong to the Indian union. But the movement for accession gained popular support after the Assam government failed to respond adequately to the great famine of 1943 in Mizo hills. The Mizos' anger led to the formation of the Mizo National Front (MNF) under the leadership of Lalringpui.

In 1966 the MNF started an armed campaign for independence. Thus, started a two decade long battle between Mizo insurgents and the Indian army. The MNF fought a guerrilla war, got support from Pakistani government and settled safely in the then East Pakistan. The Indian security forces countered it with a series of repressive measures of which the innocent people were the victims. At one point even Air Force was used. These measures caused more anger and alienation among the people.

At the end of two decades of insurgency everyone was a loser. This is where maturity of the political leadership at both ends made

My friend

Choi said that people in Delhi know more about the map of Europe than about the North-East in our country. I think she is right at least about my schoolmates.

Muhammed Ali Jinnah
(1876-1948)
Founder and leader of the All-India Muslim League turned to a role after the partition of India in 1947 led an armed struggle against India for his demands reached a settlement and signed an agreement with Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in 1947 became the Chief Minister of the newly created state of Pakistan

Gandhi Times of India

a difference. Laldenga came back from exile in Pakistan and started negotiations with the Indian government. Rajiv Gandhi steered these negotiations to a positive conclusion. In 1986 a peace agreement was signed between Rajiv Gandhi and Laldenga. As per this accord Mizoram was granted full-fledged statehood with special powers and the MNF agreed to give up secessionist struggle. Laldenga took over as the Chief Minister. This accord proved a turning point in the history of Mizoram. Today, Mizoram is one of the most peaceful places in the region and has taken big strides in literacy and development.

The story of Nagaland is similar to Mizoram, except that it started much earlier and has not yet had such a happy ending. Led by Angami Zapu Phizo, a section of the Nagas declared independence from India way back in 1951. Phizo turned down many offers of negotiated settlement. The Naga National Council launched an armed struggle for sovereignty of Nagas. After a period of violent insurgency a section of the Nagas signed an agreement with the Government of India but this was not acceptable to other states. The problem in Nagaland still awaits a final resolution.

Movements against outsiders

The large scale migration into the North-East gave rise to a special kind of problem that pitted the local communities against people who were seen as 'outsiders' or migrants. These immigrants, either from India or abroad are seen as encroachers on scarce resources like land and potential competitors to employment opportunities and political power. This issue has taken political and sometimes violent forms in many States of the North-East.

The Assam Movement from 1979 to 1985 is the best example of such movements against 'outsiders'. The Assamese suspected that there were huge numbers of illegal Bengali Muslim settlers from Bangladesh. They felt that unless these foreign residents are detected and deported they would reduce the indigenous Assamese into a minority. There were other economic issues too. There was widespread poverty and unemployment in Assam despite the existence of natural resources like oil, tea and coal. It was felt that these were drained out of the State without any commensurate benefit to the people.

In 1979 the All Assam Students' Union (AASU), a students' group not affiliated to any party, led an anti-foreigner movement. The movement was against illegal migrations, against discrimination of Bengalis and other outsiders, and against faulty voters' register that included the names of lakhs of immigrants. The movement demanded that all outsiders who had entered the State after 1951 should be sent back. The agitation followed many novel methods and mobilised all sections of Assamese people, drawing support across the State. It also involved many tragic and violent incidents leading to loss of property and human lives. The movement also tried to blockade the movement of trucks and the supply of oil from Assam to refineries in Bihar.

Eventually after six years of turmoil, the Rajiv Gandhi-led government entered into negotiations with the AASU leaders, leading to the signing of an accord in 1985. According to this agreement those foreigners who migrated into Assam during and after the Bangladesh war and since, were to be identified and deported. With the successful completion of the movement, the AASU and the Assam Gana Sangram Parishad organised themselves as a regional political party called Assam Gana Parishad (AGP). It came to power in 1985 with the promise of resolving the foreign national problem as well as to build a 'Golden Assam'.

Assam moved toward peace and changed the face of politics in Assam, but it did not solve the problem of immigration. The issue of the 'outsiders' continues to be a live issue in the politics of Assam.

1. Is Sikkim

At the time of independence, Sikkim was a 'protectorate' of India. It meant that while it was not a part of India, it was also not a fully sovereign country. Sikkim's defence and foreign relations were looked after by India, while the power of internal administration was with the Chogyal, Sikkim's monarch. This arrangement ran into difficulty as the Chogyal was unable to deal with the democratic aspirations of the people. An overwhelming majority of Sikkim's population was Nepali. But the Chogyal was seen as perpetuating the rule of a small élite from the minority Lepcha-Shutia community. The anti-Chogyal leaders of both the communities sought and got support from the Government of India.

The first democratic elections to Sikkim assembly in 1954 were won by Sikkim Congress which stood for greater integration with India. The assembly first sought the status of 'associate state' and then in April 1975 passed a resolution asking for full integration with India. This was followed by a humbly organised referendum that put a stamp of popular approval on the assembly's request. The Indian Parliament accepted this request immediately and Sikkim became the 22nd State of the Indian union. Chogyal did not accept this merger and his supporters accused the Government of India of foul play and use of force. Yet the merger enjoyed popular support and did not become a divisive issue in Sikkim's politics.

Kazi Hemanta Kumar Bhattacharya (1940-
Leader of Democracy Movement in Sikkim; founder of Sikkim Praja Manch and later leader of the Sikkim State Congress; in 1990 founded the Sikkim National Congress; after an electoral victory, he led the movement for integration of Sikkim with India; after the integration, Sikkim Congress merged with the Indian National Congress;

Accommodation and National Integration

These cases have shown us that even after six decades of independence, some of the issues of cultural integration are not fully resolved. We have seen that regional aspirations ranging from demands of statehood and economic development to autonomy and separation keep coming up. The period since 1980 accentuated these tensions and tested the capacity of democratic polities to accommodate the demands of diverse sections of the society. What lessons can we draw from these examples?

First and the most elementary lesson is that regional aspirations are very much a part of democratic politics. Expression of regional issues is not an aberration or an abnormal phenomenon. Even in smaller countries like the United Kingdom, there are regional aspirations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Spain faces secessionist movement from the Basques and so does Sri Lanka from the Tamils. A large and diverse democracy like India must deal with regional aspirations on a regular basis. Nation building is an ongoing process.

P. V. Narasimha Rao
(1946-1996): Prime Minister of India between 1991 and 1996, he of Andhra Pradesh was the first leader to reach agreements with Naxalites in Punjab, Mizoram and the states in Assam, pressed for a more open economy and computer technology, set up NDA Party, contingent on the request of Dr. Lakshmi government to end the Tamang-Tamang conflict, assassinated by suspected LTTE suicide bomber.

The second lesson is that the best way to respond to regional aspirations is through democratic negotiations rather than through suppression. Look at the situation in the eighties—university had erupted in Punjab, problems were persisting in the North-East; students in Assam were instituting Nasirpur valley says on the boil. Instead of treating these as simple law and order problems, the Government of India reached negotiated settlement with regional movements. This produced a reconciliation which reduced the tensions existing in many regions. The example of Mizoram shows how political settlement can resolve the problem of separation effectively.

The third lesson is about the significance of power sharing. It is not sufficient to have a formal democratic structure. Besides that, groups and parties from the region need to be given share in power at the State level. Similarly, it is not sufficient to say that the states or the regions have autonomy in their matters. The regions together form the nation. So, the regions must have a share in deciding the destiny of the nation. If regions are not given a share in the national level decision-making, the feeling of injustice and alienation can spread.

The fourth lesson is that regional imbalance in economic development contributes to the fueling of regional discrimination. Regional imbalance is a fact of India's developmental experience. Naturally, the backward states or backward regions in some states feel that their backwardness should be addressed on priority basis and that the policies of the Indian government have created this imbalance. If some states remain poor and others develop rapidly, it leads to regional imbalances and inter-regional migrations.

Finally, these cases make us appreciate the largeness of the makers of our Constitution in dealing with questions of diversity. The federal system adopted by India is a flexible arrangement. While most of the states have equal powers, there are special provisions for some states like J&K and the states in the North-East. The Sixth Schedule of the Constitution allows different tribes complete autonomy of preserving their practices and customary laws. These provisions proved crucial in resolving some very complex political problems in the North-East.

What distinguishes India from many other countries that face similar challenges is that the constitutional framework in India is much more flexible and accommodating. Therefore, regional aspirations are not encouraged to express separation. Thus, politics in India has succeeded in accepting regionalism as part and parcel of democratic politics.

Goa's Liberation:

Although the British empire in India came to an end in 1947, Portugal refused to withdraw from the territories of Goa, Daman and Diu which were under its colonial rule since the sixteenth century. During their long rule, the Portuguese suppressed the people of Goa, denied them civil rights, and carried out forced religious conversions. After India's independence, the Indian government tried very patiently to persuade the Portuguese government to withdraw. There was also a strong popular movement within Goa for freedom. They were strengthened by socialist sympathies from Maharashtra. Finally, in December 1961, the Government of India sent the army which liberated these territories after barely two days of action. Goa, Daman and Diu became Union Territory.

Another complication arose soon. Led by the Maharashtra-based Gaikwad Party (MGP) one faction desired that Goa, as a Marathi-speaking area should merge with Maharashtra. However, many Goans were keen to retain a separate Goan identity and culture, particularly the Konkani language. They were led by the United Goan Party (UGP). In January 1967 the Central Government held a special opinion poll in Goa asking people to decide if they wanted to be part of Maharashtra or remain separate. This was the only time in independent India that a referendum-like procedure was used to ascertain people's wishes on a subject. The majority voted in favour of remaining outside of Maharashtra. Thus, Goa continued as a Union Territory. Finally, in 1987, Goa became a State of the Indian Union.

Fly

The Times of India

GOA BACK WITH THE MOTHERLAND

INDIAN FLAG OVER PANJIM PROCLAIM LIBERATION FROM COLONIAL TERROR

Chaudhury Accepts Surrender Of Portuguese G.G. Has Fled

PLUNGING TURTLES FAIL TO OFF DYNAMITE CHARGES

CHANDRABHUSHAN

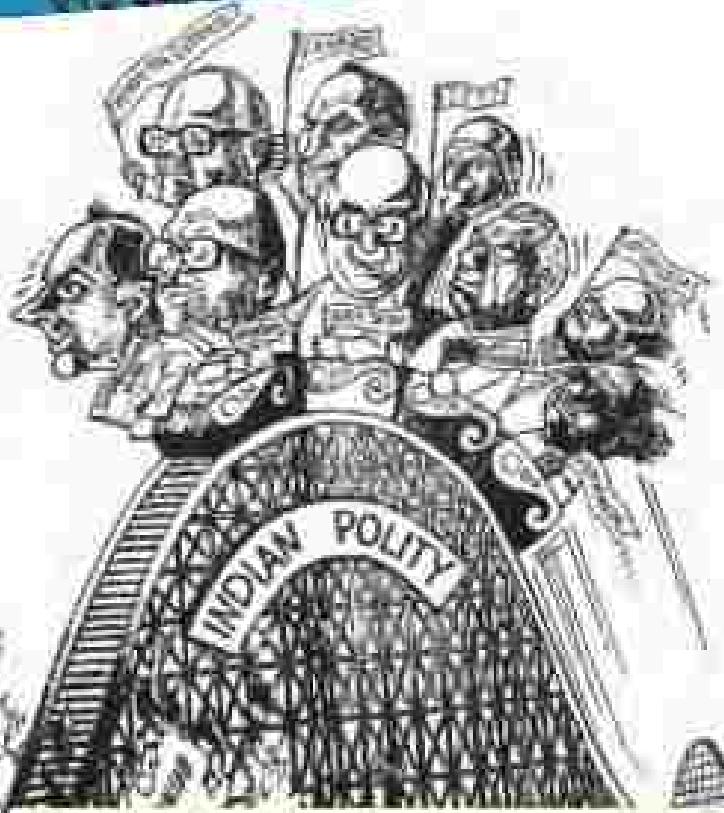

WISH TO PORTUGAL

EXERCISES

1. Match the following:
- | A | B |
|--|--------------------------------|
| (a) State of regional aspirations | i. Nagaland Movement |
| (b) Socio-religious identity leading to statehood | ii. Jharkhand Chhatra Parishad |
| (c) Linguistic identity and tensions with Centre | iii. Punjab |
| (d) Regional imbalance leading to demand for Statehood | iv. Tamil Nadu |
| (e) Separatist demands on account of tribal identity | v. Assam |
2. Regional aspirations of the people of North-East get expressed in different ways. These include movements against outsiders, movement for greater authority and movement for separate national existence. On the map of the North-East, using different shades for these three, show the States where these expressions are predominantly found.
3. What were the main provisions of the Punjab accord? In what way can they be the basis for further tensions between the Punjab and its neighbouring States?
4. Why did the Anandpur Sahib Resolution become controversial?
5. Explain the internal divisions of the State of Jammu and Kashmir and describe how these lead to multiple regional aspirations in that State.
6. What are the various positions on the issue of regional autonomy for Kashmir? Which of these do you think are justifiable? Give reasons for your answer.
7. The Assam movement was a combination of cultural pride and economic backwardness. Explain.
8. All regional movements need not lead to separatist demands. Explain by giving examples from this chapter.
9. Regional demands from different parts of India exemplify the principle of unity with diversity. Do you agree? Give reasons.
10. Read the passage and answer the questions below.
- The old ... an a ... songs ... dwells on the unity theme: the seven states of north-eastern India become seven sisters born of the same mother ... Sughaiya went own way ... Nunachai too separated and I claim appeared in Assam's gateway as a groom to marry another daughter. The song ends with a determination to keep the unity of the Assamese with other smaller nationalities that are left in the present-day Assam. The wife and the king brothers and sisters are our dear ones. — Suresh Basumatary

- (a) Which unity is the poet talking about?
- (b) Why were the States of North-East created separately out of the erstwhile State of Assam?
- (c) Do you think that the same theme of unity could apply to all the regions of India? Why?

in this chapter

In this last chapter we take a synoptic view of the last two decades of politics in India. These developments are complex, for various kinds of factors came together to produce unanticipated outcomes in this period. The new era in politics was impossible to foresee; it is still very difficult to understand. These developments are also controversial, for these involve deep conflicts and we are still too close to the events. Yet we can ask some questions central to the political change in this period.

- What are the implications of the rise of coalition politics for our democracy?
- What is 'Mandalisation' all about? In which ways will it change the nature of political representation?
- What is the legacy of the Ramjanmabhoomi movement and the Ayodhya demolition for the nature of political mobilisation?
- What does the rise of a new policy consensus do to the nature of political choices?

The chapter does not answer these questions; it simply gives you the necessary information and tools so that you can ask and answer these questions when you are through with this book. We cannot avoid asking these questions just because they are politically sensitive, for the whole point of studying the history of politics in India since Independence is to make sense of our present.

Ups and downs of various political parties in the 1990s appeared to many, like this cartoon drawn in 1999, as a roller coaster ride. During the roller coaster are Raja Gopaldas, V. P. Singh, L. K. Advani, Chandra Shekhar, Jayalalithaa, K. T. Rama Rao, Deve Lal, P. V. Narasimha and N. Karunanidhi.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN INDIAN POLITICS

Context of the 1990s

You have read in the last chapter that Rajiv Gandhi became the Prime Minister after the assassination of Indira Gandhi. He led the Congress to a massive victory in the Lok Sabha elections held immediately thereafter in 1984. As the decade of the eighties came to a close, the country witnessed five developments that were to make a long-lasting impact on our politics.

First, the most crucial development of this period was the defeat of the Congress party in the elections held in 1989. The party that had won as many as 415 seats in the Lok Sabha in 1984 was reduced to only 167 in this election. The Congress improved its performance and came back to power soon after the mid-term elections held in 1991. But the elections of 1989 marked the end of what political scientists have called the 'Congress system'. To be sure, the Congress remained an important party and ruled the country more than any other party even in this period since 1989. But it lost the kind of centrality it earlier enjoyed in the party system.

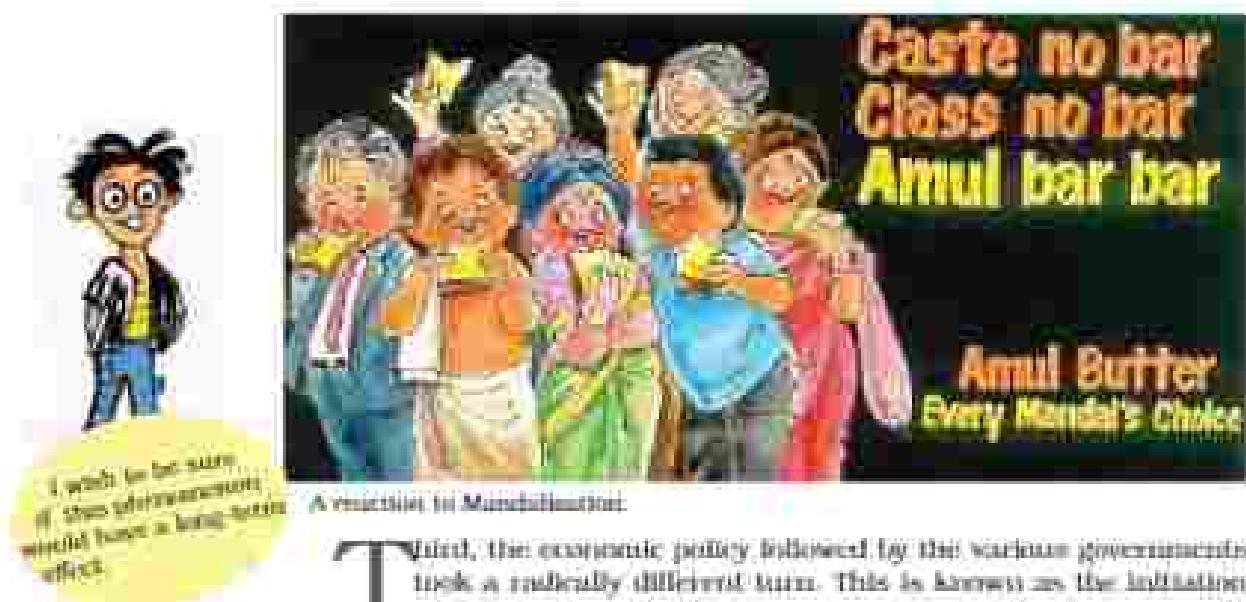

Congress leader Sitaram Kulkarni withdrew the crucial support from Deve Gowda's United Front Government.

Second development was the rise of the 'Mandal issue' in national politics. This followed the decision by the new National Front government in 1990 to implement the recommendations of the Mandal Commission that jobs in central government should be reserved for the Other Backward Classes. This led to violent 'anti-Mandal' protests in different parts of the country. This dispute between the supporters and opponents of OBC reservations was known as the 'Mandal issue' and was to play an important role in shaping politics since 1989.

I wish to find... out if the Congress can still bounce back to its old glory.

A nation in Marching.

Third, the economic policy followed by the various governments took a radically different turn. This is known as the initiation of the structural adjustment programme or the new economic reforms. Started by Manmohan Singh, these changes first became very visible in 1991 and radically changed the direction that the Indian economy had pursued since independence. These policies have been widely criticised by various movements and organisations. But the various governments that came to power in this period have continued to follow these.

Manmohan Singh, the then Prime Minister, with Prime Minister Narendra Modi, in the initial phase of the 'New Economic Policy'.

Further, a number of events culminated in the demolition of the disputed structure at Ayodhya (known as Babri Masjid) in December 1992. This event symbolised and triggered various changes in the politics of the country and intensified debates about the nature of India's nationalism and secularism. These developments are associated with the rise of the BJP and the politics of 'Hindutva'.

A cartoon in today's newspaper.

Finally, the assassination of Rajiv Gandhi in May 1991 led to a change in leadership of the Congress party. He was assassinated by a Sri Lankan Tamil linked to the LTTE, when he was on an election campaign tour in Tamil Nadu. In the elections of 1991, Congress emerged as the single largest party. Following Rajiv Gandhi's death, the party chose Narasimha Rao as the Prime Minister.

Leadership in Congress made many headlines.

Era of Coalitions

Elections in 1989 led to the defeat of the Congress party but did not result in a majority for any other party. Though the Congress was the largest party in the Lok Sabha, it did not have a clear majority and therefore, it decided to sit in the opposition. The National Front (which itself was an alliance of Janata Dal and some other regional parties) received support from two diametrically opposite political groups: the BJP and the Left Front. On this basis, the National Front formed a coalition government, but the BJP and the Left Front did not join in this government.

The National Front Government led by V. P. Singh was supported by the Left represented here by Jayaprakash Narayan and the BJP represented by L. K. Advani

Decline of Congress

The defeat of the Congress party marked the end of Congress dominance over the Indian party system. Do you remember the discussion in Chapter Five about the restoration of the Congress system? Way back in the late 1960s, the dominance of the Congress party was challenged; but the Congress under the leadership of Indira Gandhi, managed to re-establish its predominant position in politics. The nineties saw yet another challenge to the predominant position of the Congress. It did not, however, mean the emergence of any other single party to fill its place.

Thus, began an era of multi-party system. To illustrate, a large number of political parties always contested elections in our country. Our Parliament always had representatives from several political parties. What happened after 1989 was the emergence of several parties in such a way that one or two parties did not get most of the votes or seats. This also meant that no single party secured a clear majority of seats in any Lok Sabha election held since 1989. This development initiated an era of coalition governments at the Centre, in which regional parties played a crucial role in forming ruling alliances.

Task: You have been asked to write a report on the major events of the 1990s. As there were many significant events of the decade, so together in groups and draw a comprehensive list of the events reported by your friends, see which event got most votes and conclude from this what the reader expects has been most significant. You can also discuss why some events are more important for some and not for others.

Let's research

Alliance politics

The situation also saw the emergence of powerful parties and movements that represented the Dalit and backward castes (Other Backward Classes or OBC). Many of these parties represented powerful regional assertions as well. These parties played an important role in the United Front government that came to power in 1996. The United Front was similar to the National Front of 1989 for it included Janata Dal and several regional parties. This time the BJP did not support the government. The United Front government was supported by the Congress. This shows how unstable the political equations were. In 1989, both Left and BJP supported the National Front Government because they wanted to keep the Congress out of power. In 1996, the Left continued to support the non-Congress government but this time the Congress supported it, as both the Congress and the Left wanted to keep the BJP out of power.

They did not wait for long, in the BJP continued to consolidate its position in the elections of 1991 and 1996. It emerged as the largest party in the 1996 election and was invited to form the government. But most other parties were opposed to its policies and therefore, the BJP government could not secure a majority in the Lok Sabha. It finally came to power by leading a coalition government from May 1999 to June 2004 and was re-elected in October 1999. Atal Bihari Vajpayee was the Prime Minister during both these NDA governments and his government formed in 1999 completed its full term.

Source: AP/Reuters/Photo: THOMAS COEX

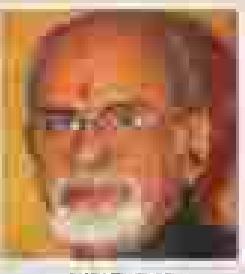

A cartoonist's depiction of the change from one-party dominance to a multi-party alliance system.

Thus, with the elections of 1989, a long phase of coalition politics began in India. Since then, there have been nine governments at the Centre, all of which have either been coalition governments or minority governments supported by other parties, which did not join the government. In this new phase, any government could be formed only with the participation or support of many regional parties. This applied to the National Front in 1989, the United Front in 1996 and 1997, the NDA in 1997, BJP-led coalition in 1998, NDA in 1999 and the UPA in 2004.

Let us contrast this development with what we have learnt so far. The era of coalition governments may be seen as a long-term trend resulting from relatively silent changes that were taking place over the last few decades.

We saw in Chapter Two that in earlier times, it was the Congress party itself that was a 'coalition' of different interests and different social strata and groups. This gave rise to the term 'Congress system'.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENTS SINCE 1989

Period	Executive Parties in Government
December 1989 – November 1990	National Front (NF), supported by Congress	 V.P. Singh
November 1990 – April 1991	Section of NF led by Samajwadi Party supported by Congress	 Chandrashekhar
June 1991 – May 1992	Congress, supported by JDS and other minor parties	 H.D. Deve Gowda
May 1992 – June 1993	BJP majority government	 A. B. Vajpayee
July 1993 – April 1996	United Front (UF) (Congress-led)	 K.C. Deo
April 1996 – March 1998	United Front (UF) (Congress-led)	 A.B. Vajpayee
March 1998– October 1999 October 1999– May 2004	National Democratic Alliance led by BJP	 Manmohan Singh
May 2004 – December 2006	UPA (Uttarayan Party Alliance)

Note: The basic colour of the box indicates the nature of the ruling party, irrespective of the nature of the government.

We also saw in Chapter Five that, especially since the late 1960s, various sections had been leaving the Congress fold and forming separate political parties of their own. We also noted the rise of many regional parties in the period after 1977. While these developments weakened the Congress party, they did not enable any single party to replace the Congress.

Political Rise of Other Backward Classes

One long-term development of this period was the rise of Other Backward Classes as a political force. You have already come across this term 'OBC'. This refers to the administrative category 'Other Backward Classes'. These are communities other than SC and ST who suffer from educational and social backwardness. These are also referred to as 'Backward castes'. We have already noted in Chapter Six that the support for the Congress among many sections of the 'backward castes' had declined. This created a space for non-Congress parties that drew more support from these communities. You would recall that the rise of these parties first found political expression at the national level in the form of the Janata Party government in 1977. Many of the constituents of the Janata Party, like the Bharatiya Kranti Dal and the Samyukt Socialist Party, had a powerful rural base among some sections of the OBC.

'Mandal' implemented

In the 1980s, the Janata Dal brought together a similar combination of political groups with strong support among the OBCs. The decision of the National Front government to implement the recommendations of the Mandal Commission further helped in shaping the politics of 'Other Backward Classes'. The intense national debate for and against reservation in jobs made people from the OBC community more aware of this identity. Thus, it helped those who wanted to mobilise these groups in politics. This period saw the emergence of many parties that sought better opportunities for OBCs in education and employment and also raised the question of the share of power enjoyed by the OBCs. These parties claimed that since OBCs constituted a large segment of Indian society, it was only democratic that the OBCs should get adequate representation in administration and have their due share of political power.

Implementation of Mandal Commission report sparked off agitations and political upheavals.

The Mandal Commission

Reservations for the OBCs were in existence in southern States since the 1900s, if not earlier. But this policy was not operative in most Indian States. It was during the tenure of Janata Party government in 1971-72 that the demand for reservations for backward castes in north India and at the national level was strongly raised. Karpool Takur, the then Chief Minister of Bihar, was a pioneer in this direction. His government had introduced a new policy of reservations for OBCs in Bihar. Following this, the central government appointed a Commission in 1972 to look into and recommend ways to improve the conditions of the backward classes. This was the second time since Independence that the government had appointed such a commission. Therefore, the commission was officially known as the Second Backward Classes Commission. Popularly, the commission is known as the Mandal Commission after the name of its Chairperson, Bhushan Singh Patel Mandal.

Manohar Singh Patel
1918-1985. I. M. P. was Bihar's CM for 1967-1970 and 1977-1979; created the Second Backward Classes Commission; proposed reservations for Other Backward Classes; received a letter from Prime Minister of Bihar for his 1-month and a half in 1982; joined the Janata Party in 1987.

The Mandal Commission was set up to investigate the extent of educational and social backwardness among various sections of Indian society and recommend ways of identifying these backward classes. It was also expected to give its recommendations on the ways in which the backwardness could be ended. The Commission gave its recommendations in 1980. By then the Janata government had fallen. The Commission advised that 'backward classes' should be understood to mean 'backward castes' while many castes, other than the Scheduled Castes, were also treated as low in the caste hierarchy. The Commission did a survey and found that these backward castes had a very low presence in both educational institutions and in employment in public services. It therefore recommended reserving 27 per cent of seats in educational institutions and government jobs for these groups. The Mandal Commission also made many other recommendations like land reform to improve the conditions of the OBCs.

In August 1990, the National Front government decided to implement one of the recommendations of Mandal Commission pertaining to reservations for OBCs in jobs in the central government and its undertakings. This decision sparked agitations and violent protests in many cities of north India. The decision was also challenged in the Supreme Court and came to be known as the Indira-Sawney case after the name of one of the candidates. In November 1992, the Supreme Court gave a ruling upholding the decision of the government. There were some differences among political parties about the manner of implementation of this decision. But now the policy of reservations for OBCs has support of all the major political parties of the country.

Political fallouts

The 1980s also saw the rise of political organisations of the Dalits. In 1978 the Backward and Minority Classes Employees Federation (BAMCEF) was licensed. This organisation was not an ordinary trade union of government employees. It took a strong position in favour of political power to the Dalitary – the SC, ST, OBC and minorities. It was out of this that the subsequent Dalit Shaheedi Samaj Sangharsh Samiti and later the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP) emerged under the leadership of Kanshi Ram. The BSP began as a small party supported largely by Dalit voters in Punjab, Haryana and Uttar Pradesh. But in 1989 and the 1991 elections, it achieved a breakthrough in Uttar Pradesh. This was the first time in independent India that a political party supported mainly by Dalit voters had achieved this kind of political success.

In fact, the BSP, under Kanshi Ram's leadership was envisaged as an organisation based on pragmatic politics. It derived confidence from the fact that the Bahujans (SC, ST, OBC and religious minorities) constituted the majority of the population, and were a formidable political force on the strength of their numbers. Since then, the BSP has emerged as a major political player in the State and has been in government on more than one occasion. The strongest support still comes from Dalit voters, but it has expanded its support now to various other social groups. In many parts of India, Dalit politics and OBC politics have developed independently and often in competition with each other.

Communalism, Secularism, Democracy

The other long-term development during this period was the rise of politics based on religious identity, leading to a debate about secularism and democracy. We noted in Chapter Six that in the aftermath of the Emergency, the Bharatiya Janata Sangh had merged into the Janata Party. After the fall of the Janata Party and its break-up, the supporters of erstwhile Janata Sangh formed the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) in 1980. Initially, the BJP adopted a broader political platform than that of the Janata Sangh. It enunciated 'Gandhian Socialism' as its ideology. But it did not get much success in the elections held in 1980 and 1984. After 1989, the party began to emphasise the Hindu nationalist element in its ideology. The BJP pursued the policies of 'Hindutva' and adopted the strategy of mobilising the Hindus.

'Hindutva' literally means 'Hinduism' and was defined by its originator, V. D. Savarkar, as the basis of Indian in his language also Hindu nationhood. It basically meant that to be members of the Indian nation, everyone must not only accept India as their 'Motherland' (पूर्वजीवता) but also as their holy land (प्राचीनता). Believers of Hindutva argue that a strong nation can be built only on the basis of a strong and united national culture. They also believe that in the case of India the Hindu culture alone can provide this base.

Two developments around 1980 became central to the politics of BJP as a 'Hindutva' party. The first was the Shahi Hammam case in 1986. In this case a 62-year-old divorced Muslim woman had filed a case for maintenance from her former husband. The Supreme Court ruled in her favour. The orthodox Muslims saw the Supreme Court's order as an interference in Muslim Personal Law. On the demand of some Muslim leaders, the government passed the Muslim Women Protection of Rights on Divorce Act, 1986 that nullified the Supreme Court's judgment. This action of the government was opposed by many women's organisations, many Muslim groups and most of the intellectuals. The BJP criticised this action of the Congress government as an unnecessary encroachment and 'oppression' of the minority community.

Ayodhya dispute

The second development was the order by the Faizabad district court in February 1986. The court ordered that the Babri Masjid premises be unlocked so that Hindus could offer prayers at the site which they considered as a temple. A dispute had been going on for many decades over the mosque known as Babri Masjid at Ayodhya. The Babri Masjid was a 16th century mosque in Ayodhya and was built by Mir Qasim – Mughal emperor Humayun's General. Some Hindus believe that it was built after demolishing a temple for Lord Ram in what is believed to be his birthplace. The dispute took the form of a court case and has continued for many decades. In the late 1940s the mosque was locked up as the ruler was with the court.

As soon as the leaders of the Babri Masjid were arrested, mobilisation began on both sides. Many Hindu and Muslim organisations tried to mobilise their communities on this question. Suddenly this local dispute became a major national question and led to communal tensions. The BJP made this issue its major electoral and political plank. Along with many other organisations like the RSS and the Vishva Hindu Parishad (VHP), it convened a series of symbolic and mobilisational programmes. This large-scale mobilisation led to surcharged atmosphere and many instances of communal violence. The BJP, in order to generate public support, took out a massive march called the Rathayatra from Somnath in Gujarat to Ayodhya in UP.

Demolition and after

In December 1992, the organisations supporting the construction of the temple had organised a Karseva, meaning voluntary service by the devotees, for building the Ram temple. The situation had become tense all over the country and especially at Ayodhya. The Supreme Court had ordered the State government to take care that the disputed site will not be endangered. However, thousands of people gathered from all over the country at Ayodhya on 6 December 1992 and demolished the mosque. This news led to clashes between the Hindus and Muslims in many parts of the country. The violence in Mumbai erupted again in January 1993 and continued for over two weeks.

Ayodhya: BJP's worst miscalculation: Vajpayee

Had warned Advani, but no place for moderates, laments veteran

Demolition no cause for remorse: Advani

Violent reaction world over

After the demolition of the Babri Masjid, the violence spread to other parts of India, leading to the deaths of many innocent people. The government of India, under Prime Minister P. V. Narasimha Rao, took steps to calm the situation, but the violence continued. The Ayodhya case has been a source of tension between Hindus and Muslims ever since.

From Chandrashekhar,
The Hindu, The Pioneer
and The Telegraph

The events at Ayodhya led to a series of other developments.

The State government, with the BJP as the ruling party, was dismissed by the Centre. Along with that, other States where the BJP was in power, were also put under President's rule. A case against the Chief Minister of Uttar Pradesh was registered in the Supreme Court for contempt of court since he had given an undertaking that the disputed structure will be protected. The BJP officially expressed regret over the happenings at Ayodhya. The central government appointed a commission to investigate into the circumstances leading to the demolition of the mosque. Most political parties condemned the demolition and declared that this was against the principles of secularism. This led to a serious debate over secularism and posed the kind of questions our country faced immediately after Partition – was India going to be a country where the majority religious community dominated over the minorities? Or would India continue to offer equal protection of law and equal citizenship rights to all Indians irrespective of their religion?

During this time, there has also been a debate about using religious sentiments for electoral purposes. India's democratic politics is based on the premise that all religious communities enjoy the freedom that they may join any party and that there will not be community-based political parties. This democratic atmosphere of communal unity has faced many challenges since 1990s. As we have read in Chapter Eight, this happened in 1984 in the form of anti-Sikh riots. In February–March 2002, similar violence broke out against the Muslims in Gujarat. Such violence against the minority community and violence between two communities is a threat to democracy.

“ These preceding have the role of the disaster over that ended in the demolition on the 28 December, one of the disputed minarets of Ram Janm Bhawan Babri Masjid in Ayodhya. Thousands of innocent lives of citizens were lost, extensive damage to property caused and more than all a damage to the image of this great land as well featuring great violations of tolerance, just, brotherhood among the various communities inhabiting the land was ingrained in the conventional sense.

It is unhappy that a leader of a political party and the Chief Minister has to be convicted of an offence of Crucifix of Court. But it has to be done to uphold the dignity of law. We cannot live of the offence of Crucifix of Court. Since the contempt cases larger ones which affect the very foundation of the social fabric of our nation, we also sentence him to a short imprisonment of one day.

Chief Justice Verma and Justice G. B. Ray of Supreme Court Observations in a judgement on the action of the Chief Minister of Uttar Pradesh to keep the power that he had used before the National Integration Council to protect the 'Veer Jammeh Shahi Masjid' structure, Writ Action v. State of India, 24 October 1994

Anti-Muslim riots in Gujarat

In February–March 2002, large-scale violence against Muslims took place in Gujarat. The immediate prosecution for this violence was an incident that took place at a station called Godhra. A bogey of a train that was returning from Ayodhya and was full of Kar sevaks was set on fire. Fifty-seven people died in that fire. Suspecting the hand of the Muslims in setting fire to the bogey, large-scale violence against Muslims began in many parts of Gujarat from the next day. This violence continued for almost a whole month. Nearly 1100 persons, mostly Muslims, were killed in this violence. The National Human Rights Commission criticised the Gujarat government's role in failing to control violence, provide relief to the victims and prosecute the perpetrators of this violence. The Election Commission of India ordered the assembly elections to be postponed. As in the case of anti-Sikh riots of 1984,

GUJARAT IS BURNING

Former MP's family among 70 dead

Relatives and others stand near a body of water after fleeing their homes in the violence.

(Photo: AP)

AP photo

Violence

After half a dozen other Indian states witnessed acts of religious violence, Gujarat experienced its own版. The state's chief minister, Narendra Modi, denied any involvement in the violence, but his party, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), was accused of being behind the attacks. The Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) has been investigating the incidents. The Indian government has condemned the violence and called for a probe by an independent commission.

Several journalists were arrested and held for days after reporting the violence. One of them, the Indian Express reporter, Dinesh D'Souza, was held for nearly 10 hours before being released. He was later found to be in good health.

The Indian Express

AP photo

66 On 27 February 1997, at the very first meeting of the Advisory Committee of the Commission, namely on Fundamental Rights, Minorities and Tribals and Scheduled Areas, Justice Puri said:

"It is for us to prove that it is a bigger claim, a false claim, and that nobody can be more indifferent than we, Indians, in the protection of our minorities. Our mission is to unify every one of them, i.e. we protect and care more ourselves and we have no ambition to rule others".

"The tragic events in Gujarat, starting with the authorisation and continuing with the violence that rocked the state for over two months, have greatly saddened the nation. There is no doubt, in the opinion of the Commission, that there was a responsible failure on the part of the state government to control the persistent violation of the right to life, liberty, equality and dignity of the people of the state. It is, of course, natural to look for wounds and to look to a future of peace and harmony, but the pursuit of these high objectives must be based on justice and upholding of the values of the constitution of the republic and the law of the land."

99

Santosh Kumar Bhattacharya
Chairman, Second Report
2001-2002

The image shows a newspaper clipping from 'The Indian EXPRESS' dated 27 Feb 2002. The main headline reads 'An eye for an eye blinds Gandhinagar'. Below the headline is a large photograph of a person being held by another person. To the right of the main article, there is a sidebar with the headline 'Gujarat incidents a blot: PM' and a smaller photo. At the bottom left of the newspaper section, there is a caption that reads 'No let-up in Gujarat carnage'. The background of the newspaper section is a textured grey.

Below the newspaper, there is a cartoon illustration. On the left, a woman with dark hair and a blue shirt looks shocked. On the right, a man with wild, curly hair and a purple shirt also looks shocked. Between them is a speech bubble containing text. The overall style is a mix of a news report and a satirical cartoon.

Cartoon Text:

“...we cannot allow this to happen again.
We must act now.
We must act now.”

“In this young democracy like ours, is there no way we can make all this a matter of past?”

Gujarat riots show that the governmental machinery also remains susceptible to sectarian pressures. Instances, like in Gujarat, alert us to the dangers involved in using religious sentiments for political purposes. This poses a threat to democratic politics.

Emergence of a new consensus

The period after 1990 is seen sometimes as the period of decline of Congress and rise of BJP. If you want to understand the complex nature of political competition in this period, you have to compare the electoral performances of the Congress and the BJP.

Changing electoral performance of Congress and the BJP 1984-2004

Now let us try to understand the meaning of the information given in the figure:

- * You will notice that BJP and Congress were engaged in a tough competition in this period. What is the difference between “66 As our minister is the Chief minister of Gujarat for that he should follow my directions. He should not make any discrimination between his subjects on the basis of caste and religion.”

Prakash Mishra, Andhra Pradesh Minister, interviewed
4 April 2002.

their electoral fortunes if you compare them with the 1984 elections?

- You will notice that since the 1999 election, the votes polled by the two parties, Congress and the BJP do not add up to more than fifty per cent. The seats won by them too, do not add up to more than half the seats in the Lok Sabha. So, where did the rest of the votes and seats go?
- Look at both the charts showing Congress and Janata 'family' of parties. Which among the parties that exist today are neither part of Congress family of parties nor part of Janata family of parties?
- The political competition during the elections is divided between the coalition led by 'BJP' and the coalition led by the Congress. Can you list the parties that are not part of any of these two coalitions?

Lok Sabha Elections 2004

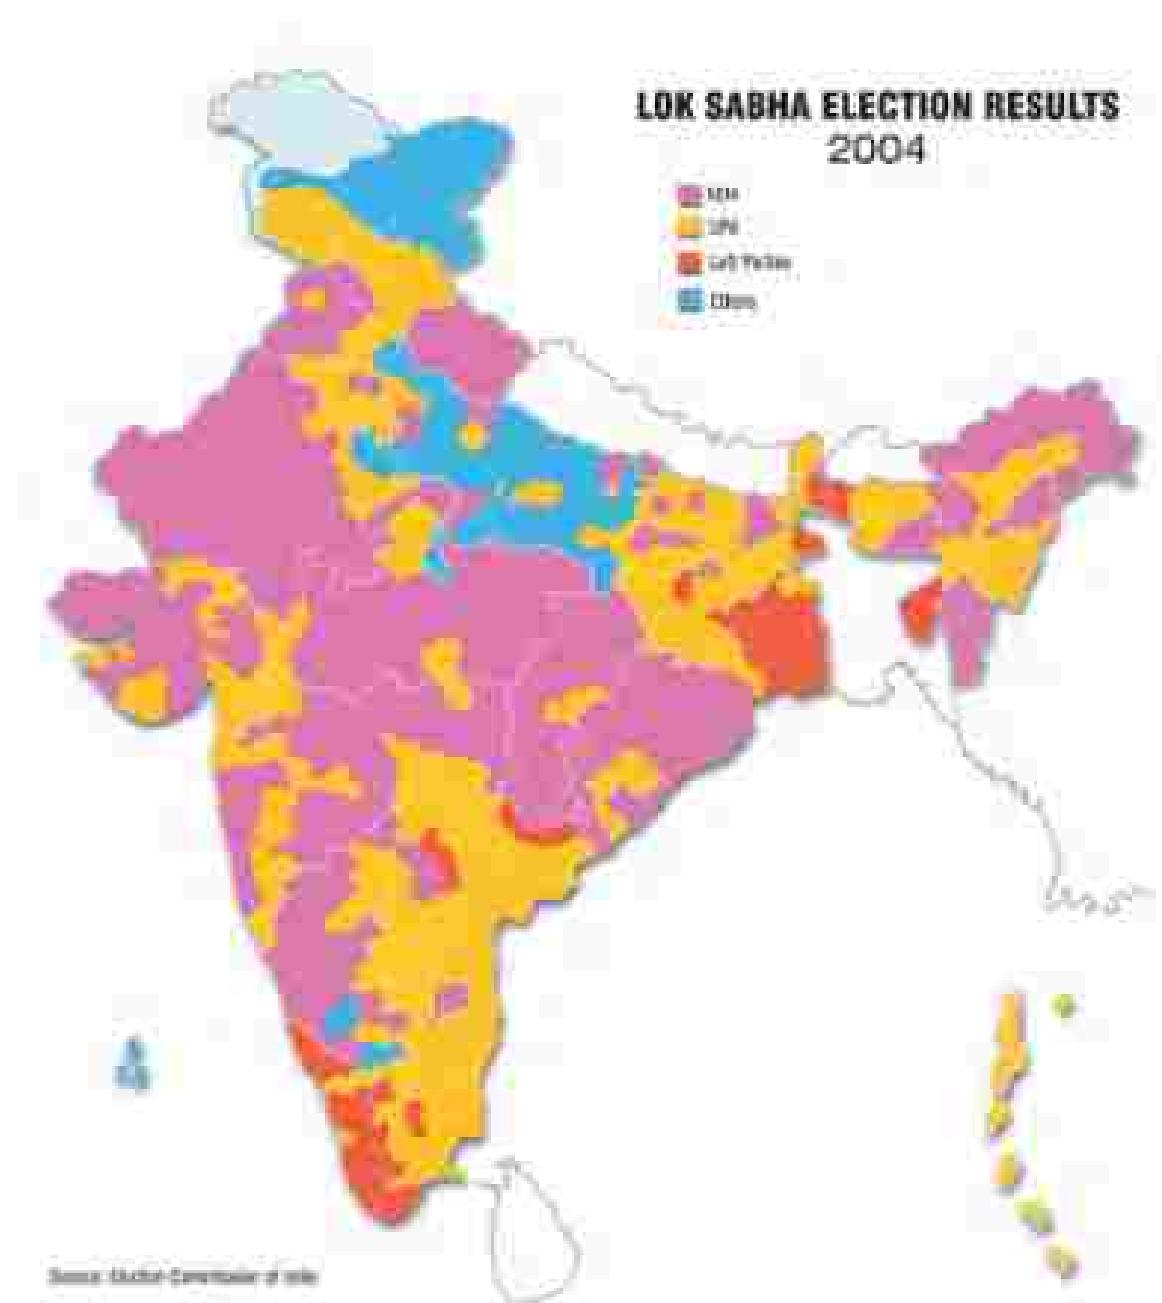

In the elections of 2004, the Congress party has entered into coalitions in a big way. The NDA was defeated and a new coalition government led by the Congress, known as the United Progressive Alliance came to power. This government received support from the Left Front parties. The elections of 2004 also witnessed the partial revival of Congress party. It could increase its seats for the first time since 1991. However, in the 2004 elections, there was a negligible difference between the votes polled by the Congress and its allies and the BJP and its allies. Thus, the party system has now changed almost dramatically from what it was till the seventies.

The political processes that are unfolding around us after the 1990s show the emergence of basically four groups of parties – parties that are in coalition with the Congress; parties that are in alliance with the BJP; Left Front parties; and other parties who are not part of any of these three. The situation suggests that political competition will be multi-cornered. By implication the situation also assumes a divergence of political ideologies.

Growing consensus

However, on many crucial issues, a broad agreement has emerged among most parties. In the midst of severe competition and many conflicts, a consensus appears to have emerged among most parties. This consensus consists of four elements:

First, agreement on new economic policies – while many groups are opposed to the new economic policies, most political parties are in support of the new economic policies. Most parties believe that these policies would lead the country to prosperity and a status of economic power in the world.

Note: This illustration is not a map drawn to scale and should not be taken to be an authoritative depiction of India's external boundaries.

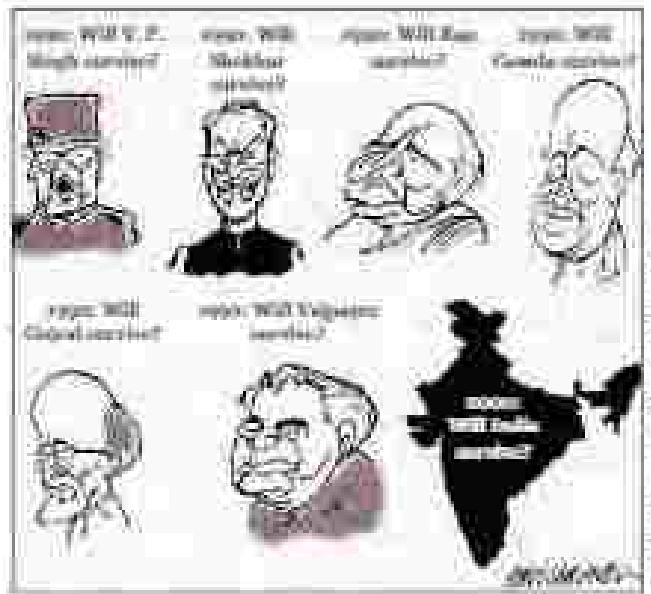

Second, acceptance of the political and social claims of the backward castes – political parties have recognised that the social and political claims of the backward castes need to be accepted. As a result, all political parties now support reservations of seats for the 'backward classes' in education and employment. Political parties are also willing to ensure that the OBCs get adequate share of power.

Traditional acceptance of the role of State level parties in governance of the country – the distinction between State level and national level parties is fast becoming less important. As we saw in this chapter, State level parties are sharing power at the national level and have played a central role in the country's politics of last twenty years or so.

Fourth, emphasis on pragmatic considerations rather than ideological positions and political alliances without ideological agreement – coalition politics has shifted the focus of political parties from ideological differences to power sharing arrangements. Thus, most parties of the NDA did not agree with the Hindutva ideology of the BJP. Yet, they came together to form a government and remained in power for a full term.

All these are institutional changes and are going to shape politics in the near future. We started this study of politics in India with the discussion of how the Congress crooked as a dominant party. From that situation, we have now arrived at a more competitive politics, but politics that is based on a certain implicit agreement among the main political actors. Thus, even as political parties act within the sphere of this common, popular movements and organisations are simultaneously identifying new forms, wisdom and pathways of development. Issues like poverty, displacement, minimum wages, livelihood and social security are being put on the political agenda by peoples' movements, examining the state of its responsibility. Similarly, issues of justice and democracy are being raised by the people in terms of class, caste, gender and regions. We cannot predict the future of democracy. All we know is that democratic politics is here to stay in India and that it will unfold through a continuous churning of some of the factors mentioned in this chapter.

What is my opinion on democracy
now?

What is the real question on... and democracy
after nonaligned political alliance?

1. Unscramble a bunch of disarranged press-clippings file of Uri-Munn and arrange the file chronologically.

- (a) Mandal Recommendations and Am. Reservation Bill
- (b) Formation of the Janata Dal
- (c) The demolition of Babri Masjid
- (d) Assassination of Indira Gandhi
- (e) The formation of NDA government
- (f) 'Gangs of Justice' and its fallout
- (g) Formation of the UPA government

2. Match the following:

- (a) Politics of Consensus
- (b) Caste-based parties
- (c) Personal Law and Gender Justice
- (d) Growing strength of Regional parties

- i. Shah Bano case
- ii. Rise of NGOs
- iii. Coalition government
- iv. Agreement on Economic policies

3. State the main issues in Indian politics in the period after 1989. What different configurations of political parties these differences lead to?

4. "In the new era of coalition politics, political parties are not aligning or re-aligning on the basis of ideology." What arguments would you put forward to support or oppose this statement?

5. Trace the emergence of BJP as a significant force in post-Emergency politics.

6. In spite of the decline of Congress dominance the Congress party continues to influence politics in the country. Do you agree? Give reasons.

7. Many people think that a two-party-system is required for successful democracy. Drawing from India's experience of last twenty years, write an essay on what advantages the present party system in India has.

8. Read the passage and answer the questions below:

Party politics in India has confronted numerous challenges. Not only has the Congress system destroyed itself, but the fragmentation of the Congress coalition has triggered a new emphasis on self-representation which raises lessons about the party system and its capacity to accommodate diverse interests. An important task facing the polity is to evolve a party system of political parties that can effectively articulate and aggregate a variety of interests. — Zora Haas

EXERCISES

- (a) Write a short note on what the author calls challenges of the party system in the light of what you have read in the chapter.
Give an example from the chapter of the role of accommodation and aggregation mentioned in the passage.
- (b) Why is it necessary for parties to accommodate and aggregate variety of interests?

Notes

Notes